THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

History of Mr. Greeley's Trip to Canada in 1864.

He Enters Into Correspondence with the Rebels and is Invited to Canada.

In Return He Invites His Rebel Friends to Washington.

He Misunderstands the Rebels and Misrepresents Mr. Lincoln.

After Placing Mr. Lincoln in a False Position, He Refuses to Release Him.

A Story of Cowardice, Craft and Duplicity.

Does the Country Want Mr. Greeley as a Democratic President?

We have now two documents from the rebel archives—the report of Jacob Thompson, and the report of Prof. James P. Holcombe. The former has already been laid before our readers. The latter is given below. Prof. Holcombe's report relates almost entirely to the Niagara peace negotiations, and we now propose to review as briefly as possible the history of those negotiations, so far as that can be done with the documents given to the public up to the present time.

In both papers from the rebel archives much stress is laid on the effect of the peace conference in 1864 on the then pending Presidential campaign. That the conference did exert a very marked effect, and one favorable to the success of Democracy and the rebellion, was well known at the time, and to no one was it better known than to Mr. Greeley. But to have the fact recalled, and attested by evidence of such high authority, is something which Mr. Greeley, as a candidate for the Presidency, would certainly prevent, if he could. Yet there is nothing in Jacob Thompson's or in Mr. Holcombe's report which is not fully sustained by the records already published, while there is much in those records to sustain the inference that not only did this conference hurt the Union cause, but that Mr. Greeley refused, when appealed to, to allow that injury to be either prevented or remedied. Let us briefly recount the facts.

The first document accessible to the public, previous to Holcombe's report, throwing any light on the conference, was a letter from one Jewett to Horace Greeley, dated at Niagara Falls, July 5, 1864. This letter opens: "My dear Mr. Greeley: In reply to your note, I have to advise having just left Hon. George N. Sanders, of Kentucky, on the Canada side." It goes on: "I am authorized to state to you, for our use only, not the public, that two ambassadors of Davis & Co. are now in Canada with full and complete powers for a peace." By this letter it is shown that it was in answer to one from Mr. Greeley; that Greeley's letter had covered the same subject matter; that he and Jewett had been made the confidants of the rebel agents, who intrusted important information to Jewett for the joint use of Jewett and Greeley only. The letter further requested a private interview between the rebel agents and Greeley. From Holcombe's report, it seems that Greeley had been invited by Sanders to come to Niagara. It is not clear whether this invitation preceded or followed the letter from Greeley to Jewett referred to in Jewett's letter of July 5.

Jewett's letter, with a subsequent telegram to the same effect, Mr. Greeley sent to Mr. Lincoln, with the following remarks:

NEW-YORK, July 7, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I venture to inclose you a letter and telegraphic dispatch that I received yesterday from our irreproachable friend, Colonel Jewett, at Niagara Falls. I think they deserve attention. Of course I do not indorse Jewett's positive averment that the friends at the Falls have "full powers" from J. D., though I do not doubt that he thinks they have. I let that statement stand as simply evidencing the anxiety of the Confederates everywhere for peace. So much is beyond doubt.

And, therefore, I venture to remind you that our bleeding, bankrupt, almost dying country, who longs for peace—shudders at the prospect of Press conscription, of further wholesale decimations, and of new rivers of human blood; and a well-nigh universal conviction that the Government and its prominent supporters are not quite keen for peace, and do not improve proffered opportunities to ascertain it, is doing great harm now, and is morally certain, unless removed, to do far greater on the approaching elections.

It is not enough that we anxiously desire a true and lasting peace; we ought to demonstrate and establish the truth beyond cavil. The fact that A. H. Stephens was not permitted a year ago to visit and confer with the authorities at Washington has done harm, which the fuss at the late National Convention at Baltimore is not calculated to counteract.

I entreat you, in your own time and manner, to attempt overturns the pacification to the Southern malcontents, which the impartial must pronounce frank and generous. If only with a view to the contingencies stamped soon to occur in North Carolina, and if the draft to be enforced on the five States, this should be done at once. I would give the safe-conduct required by the rebel envoys at Niagara, upon their parole to avoid observation and to refrain from all communication with their sympathizers in the Loyal States; but you may see reasons for delaying it. But whether through them or otherwise, do not, I entreat you, fail to make the Southern people comprehend that you, and all of us, are earnest for peace, and prepared to grant liberal terms. I venture to suggest the following:

PLAN OF ADJUSTMENT:

1. The Union is restored and declared perpetual.

2. Slavery is utterly and forever abolished throughout the same.

3. A complete amnesty for all political offenses, with a restoration of all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States.

4. The Union to pay four hundred million dollars ($400,000,000) in five per cent. United States stock to the late slave States, loyal and secession alike, to be apportioned pro rata according to their slave population respectively, by the census of 1860, in compensation for the losses of their loyal citizens by the abolition of slavery. Each State to be entitled to its quota upon the ratification, by its Legislature of this adjustment. The bonds to be at the absolute disposal of the Legislature aforesaid.

5. The said slave States to be entitled henceforth to representation in the House on the basis of their total, instead of their Federal population, the whole now being free.

6. A National Convention, to be assembled as soon as may be, to ratify this adjustment, and make such changes in the Constitution as may be deemed advisable.

MY PRESIDENT, I fear you do not realize how earnestly the people desire any peace consistent with the national integrity and honor, and how joyously they would hail its achievement and bless its authors. With United States stocks worth but forty cents in gold per dollar, and drafting about to commence on the third million of Union soldiers, can this be wondered at?

I do not say that a just peace is now advisable, though I believe it to be so. But I do say that a frank offer by you to the insurgents of terms which the impartial say ought to be accepted will, at the worst, prove an immense and sorely needed advantage to the national cause. It may save us from a Northern insurrection.

Yours truly, HORACE GREELEY.

Hon. A. LINCOLN, President, Washington, D. C.

P. S.—Even though it should be deemed unadvisable to make an offer of terms to the rebels, I insist that, in any possible case, it is desirable that any offer they may be disposed to make should be received, and either accepted or rejected. I beg you to invite those now at Niagara to exhibit their credentials and submit their ultimatum. H. G.

We give this letter in full, and we ask our readers to peruse it and Jewett's letter carefully, because they throw a great deal of light on the motives which prompted Mr. Greeley, and on the spirit in which he approached the rebel agents, and also on what the rebel agents themselves desired. Mr. Greeley's letter shows that he was himself completely cowed by the perils that assailed the country; that he had no perception or appreciation of, and hence no confidence in, the sublime courage and resolution of the loyal people, which had found expression at Baltimore in the declaration for "no peace on any terms but unconditional surrender;" it shows that he failed utterly to understand the character of Mr. Lincoln, the deep hold it had upon the people, and the solid basis for the popular affection which existed in the President's unfaltering fidelity and sober wisdom. The letters together show that what the rebel agents wanted first and most was an interview with Mr. Greeley.

To the strange letter of Mr. Greeley, which the President must have read with astonishment and grief, he returned a simple and brief reply, dated the 9th of July. He said:

"If you can find, AND PERSON anywhere, professing to have any proposition of Jefferson Davis, in writing, for peace, embracing the restoration of the Union, and abandonment of slavery, whatever else it embraces, say to him he may come to me with you, and that if he really brings such proposition, he shall, at least, have safe conduct with the papers (and without publicity if he chooses) to the point where you shall have met him. The same if there be two or more persons."

Our readers will note that this letter required three things: 1, that any persons furnished with safe conduct should profess to have a proposition for peace from Davis; 2, that that proposition should be in writing, and 3, that it should embrace the restoration of the Union, and the abandonment of slavery.

To this Mr. Greeley returned a curt and insulting reply, of which the President took no notice. On the 13th Mr. Greeley again wrote, commencing his letter: "I have now information on which I can rely that two persons duly commissioned and empowered to negotiate for peace, are at this moment not far from Niagara Falls, in Canada." Of this statement Holcombe remarks: "We had never written a line or uttered a word to justify such an inference." Mr. Greeley gave the names of the rebel agents (that of Jacob Thompson was one) and requested safe conducts for them. To this, on the 15th, Mr. Lincoln responded in a note delivered by Major Hay, explicitly instructing Mr. Greeley to show the rebel agents his letter of the 9th, containing the three conditions to which we have referred. Mr. Lincoln, also, on application of Mr. Greeley, through Major Hay, authorized the issue of safe conducts, to be used only under the conditions already named.

Mr. Greeley then went to Niagara Falls, and opened a correspondence with the rebel agents with the following letter, which, considering all the circumstances, is absolutely inexplicable on any theory of Mr. Greeley's sound judgment or political honesty.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 17, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: I am informed that you are duly accredited from Richmond as the bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace; that you desire to visit Washington in the fulfilment of your mission; that you further desire that Mr. George N. Sanders shall accompany you. If my information be thus substantially correct, I am authorized by the President of the United States to tender you his safe conduct on the journey proposed, and to accompany you at the earliest time that will be agreeable to you.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, yours,

HORACE GREELEY.

The essential statement in this letter, viz., that Mr. Greeley was authorized to take the rebel agents to Washington on the terms he mentioned, was the exact reverse of the truth. He was not authorized directly or indirectly to do so. On the contrary, he was only authorized to tender his safe conduct on three certain defined conditions, viz., that the persons given it should have a proposition from Davis, that it should be in writing, and that it should embrace the restoration of the Union, and the abandonment of slavery. These conditions he was emphatically directed to make known. Two of them he never mentioned, the other he only indefinitely stated. For this conduct on Mr. Greeley's part, we repeat we can conceive of no explanation.

The reply of the rebels was crafty. They had not the authority Mr. Greeley supposed they had, but they had no doubt they could get it. Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to get a safe conduct for them to Richmond? Mr. Greeley was again gulled, and telegraphed to the President at the request of his rebel friends. Mr. Lincoln, weary and disgusted with the whole affair, sent on Major Hay with an open letter to deliver to the rebels in Greeley's presence, repeating exactly the conditions contained in the President's letter of the 9th. The rebels affected to get sorry, declared the President had been offering to receive them, and then imposing impossible conditions, relieved Mr. Greeley of responsibility for failure, thanked him unctuously for his "solicitude," and threw the burden of blame on Mr. Lincoln.

There it rested during the long and trying political struggle for Mr. Lincoln's re-election, on the issue of which depended the salvation of the country. Every copperhead, every screehead in the land accused Mr. Lincoln of doubt and delay as the question of peace, of imposing novel and vexatious conditions, and of refusing advances when they were offered. Mr. Greeley saw this and knew it. The President appealed to him for permission to publish the whole correspondence, omitting only the portions expressive of his despair in the Union cause. He refused, and the great-hearted Lincoln wrote to a personal friend: "I have concluded that it is better for me to submit for the time to the consequences of the false position in which I consider he has placed me, than to subject the country to the consequences of publishing these discouraging and injurious parts."

The view taken above of Mr. Greeley's course is amply confirmed by Holcombe's report, which we give in full below. By this it will be seen that Mr. Greeley's inclination for peace on liberal terms was made evident to the rebels early in June, 1864; that he was invited by Sanders, as Ben Wood, Jerry Black and others of that stamp had been, to meet the Confederate agents at Niagara, and was ready to do so; that, in suppressing the instructions of the President, he placed that gentleman in an utterly false position, calculated to "nourish" in Confederate breasts "hopes of compromise;" and that he fully approved and undertook to forward a journey of the rebel agents to Washington, from which they themselves hoped for the greatest advantages to the rebel cause.

Holcombe's report is as follows:

Hon. J. P. Benjamin, Secretary of State, C. S. A.:

SIR: I desire to submit to you, as the head of the Department to which I am directly responsible, and under whose control they should, if possible, have been conducted, the history of certain transactions in which I was engaged while in Canada, but which did not fall within the scope of the duties assigned me by the President. I will not here repeat the reasons which have been communicated in previous reports for protracting my stay in the British Provinces. During the interval of leisure which this delay afforded me, I was practically associated by my friends, Messrs. Clay and Thompson, with themselves in the execution of their more comprehensive and delicate mission.

SANDERS' PART.

In anticipation of the arrival of these gentlemen at Niagara, but, as I believe, without their previous knowledge or sanction, Mr. George N. Sanders, then residing in that part of Canada, invited a number of citizens of the United States, supposed to be hostile to the existing Administration, to visit the Falls and interchange opinions upon the condition of the country and the great question of peace, with the prominent Confederate gentlemen who were expected to spend a portion of the Summer at that place. Such conferences being entirely legitimate under the construction which Messrs. Clay and Thompson (no doubt very properly) placed upon their powers and duties, I had no hesitation in meeting the public men who came to the Falls, and expressed a desire for my society. That point being the most convenient and eligible for the transaction of my own business, I remained there during the whole period of my stay in Canada, and thus had opportunities of more frequent and extensive intercourse with these gentlemen than either of my friends, one of whom, Mr. Clay, made his head-quarters at St. Catharines, the other, Mr. Thompson, at Toronto.

WHO WENT TO SEE THE REBEL AGENTS.

Besides a crowd of less distinguished persons, I saw during the course of the Summer (in some instances repeatedly) Gov. Hunt, of New-York; Messrs. Leigh, Richmond and Benjamin Wood, of the same State; Mr. Buckalew, Judge Black, and Mr. Van Dyke, of Pennsylvania; McLean, of the Cincinnati Inquirer; Weller, of California; Judge Bullitt, of Kentucky, and Col. Walker, of Indiana. We received messages from other gentlemen, such as Voorhees, of Indiana, and Pendleton, of Ohio. Before Mr. Clay and myself had reached Niagara, Mr. Thompson had seen Mr. Vallandigham. The impression, which had been made upon my mind by what I learned from these gentlemen, and from many other sources of information, including interviews with leading members of the Order of the Sons of Liberty, as to the temper of the Democratic Party, and especially of the people of the North-west, and the prospect of any action in that section favorable to our cause, I shall state in another part of this report.

MR. GREELEY ATTRACTS THEIR ATTENTION.

Certain editorials which appeared in the New-York Tribune early in June, connected with intimations from our friends in New-York, induced a hope (which with me has ripened into an abiding conviction) that the able editor of that influential journal entertained opinions upon the subject of peace much more reasonable and moderate than those of the Republican Party in general. For this reason neither Mr. Clay nor myself (Mr. Thompson being in Toronto, and taking no part in these conferences, except with one or two gentlemen who visited him in that city) discouraged Mr. Sanders from sending such an invitation through a third person to Mr. Greeley as he had sent to others, to come to the Falls and see us.

MR. GREELEY WILLING TO VISIT THEM.

Mr. Sanders soon reported that this suggestion was most kindly received by Mr. Greeley, but that he expressed a preference for Washington as a place of meeting, and desired to know if we were willing to go there. It did not occur to us, as we had no doubts from what had subsequently transpired was the fact, that Mr. Greeley supposed we held any, even diplomatic position. We have never written a line or uttered a word to justify such an inference. The anonymous publications, attributing to us conversations in which various terms of peace and reconstruction were suggested, had no shadow of foundation in truth.

CHARACTER OF JEWETT.

This impression of Mr. Greeley most probably arose from the ignorance, folly or knavery of Colorado Jewett, who was the medium of communication between Mr. Sanders and himself. Nothing could be further from the truth than the statement of our ingenuous friend, Dr. Mackey, in his letter to the London Times, that we laid a trap to catch Mr. Lincoln. Had we suspected any delusion as to our true character, or the informal nature of the proposed conference, it would have been promptly dissolved. In considering the propriety of accepting the suggestion of Mr. Greeley to visit Washington, we must decidly represent that it was impossible to submit the question to our own Government for its decision.

Were vacuum to us, however, upon subsequent reflection, as to the line of conduct which would advance the interests of our country. The great object to be accomplished by such a visit was to induce the President to grant an armistice, in the hope that the passions of our people would cool, and that the Northern people, wearied with the miseries of war, would compel their representatives to recognize the independence of the Confederate States, rather than see the country ruined by the continuance of the war. We had no authority to propose such a step, but we had every reason to believe that the President would receive the proposition with favor, and that the armistice would be followed by a peace which would be hailed with joy by the people of the North-west, and which would secure to them the blessings for which they had fought so long and so bravely. Our own people would have accepted it as the dawn of that day for which they had prayed so long and so earnestly, and would have given to their President a cordial support in his efforts to secure the independence of the Confederate States. The European powers would have recognized our independence, and we would have established our commercial relations with the world on such terms as we chose to dictate. The African would have been left to the care of his master, and the institution of slavery would have died a lingering death, under the influence of those causes which were hastening its decay when the war began. The North-west would have been secured to the Union by the navigation of the Mississippi, and the South would have given her her share of the National debt incurred in the war, in consideration of the benefits resulting from the termination of the war on the basis of a separation of the belligerents. Such were the results we hoped would follow the adoption by our Government of the views of Mr. Greeley. We believed that the President was fully aware of the advantages which would result to his country from the adoption of his views, and we were at a loss to know what could induce him to reject the proposition of a gentleman who had been so earnest in his demand for peace, and who had exerted such a mighty influence in the cause of peace by the free discussion it would have authorized and sanctioned. The opportunities of general and unrestrained intercourse might have been improved so as to secure an insight into the temper and policy of the Administration, the views of leading public men, the spirit of the people, and the resources of the country. Under this conviction we authorized Mr. Sanders (acknowledgedly as Mr. Greeley was willing to present to Washington upon the leader of an informal and unconditional mission from the President of the United States. When Mr. Sanders submitted the note to us, which appears first in the printed correspondence, we found that he had, most unexpectedly, associated his name with our own in the proposed visit. There were serious objections to this association, but believing Mr. Sanders to be a sincere and zealous friend of the Confederacy, thinking that on this occasion his peculiar talents might render him useful in acquiring the information we desired, and feeling that if the safe conduct was tendered his wishes on this subject would be entitled to some consideration, we permitted the note to be sent without correction. It is, however, incumbent upon me to add that, with all proper respect for Mr. Sanders, he was at no time taken into my confidence, nor, I believe, into that of Mr. Clay.

WHAT MR. GREELEY OFFERED.

In a few days we received a letter from Mr. Greeley advising us of his arrival at the International Hotel, on the American side of the Falls, and tendering us a safe conduct to Washington and his own escort, upon the hypothesis that we were duly accredited from Richmond as the bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace, and desired to visit Washington in the fulfilment of our mission. Mr. Clay and myself were so deeply impressed with the grave responsibility which would attach to any action we might take on this communication, that we telegraphed to Col. Thompson to meet us at St. Catharines and unite in our deliberations. While I can only report the reasoning which led my own mind to its conclusions, yet I may add that the response which was made to Greeley received the approbation of Mr. Thompson, as well as of Mr. Clay and myself. Our most obvious course was to have informed Mr. Greeley that he labored under a strange delusion, both as to our character and our wishes, and that we could only meet him as private citizens, and for an informal interchange of opinion. This course, however, as I thought, would have given the party now in power in the United States the means of defending itself against the charge which was used with most effect by its political adversaries. Neither the present nor any other Republican Administration can secure the same degree of public support in the prosecution of the war as a policy of confiscation and emancipation, as on a policy which looks simply to the restoration of the Union. Mr. Lincoln was reproached with an unwillingness to make peace on any terms short of the subjugation of the States of this Confederacy, and the utter overthrow of their peculiar social system, and a consequent indisposition to ascertain the sentiments of the Southern people, for fear they might profess a readiness to submit to the authority of the United States on more reasonable conditions. Although no proposition for peace which did not concede our absolute independence would have been entertained by us for a moment, it did not seem to me wise to give our enemies the moral and material benefit to be derived from a position they were not honestly entitled to occupy.

HOW MR. GREELEY'S LETTER WAS CONSTRUED.

Had we returned the answer which has been suggested, the friends of President Lincoln could have appealed to the letter of Mr. Greeley as a proof of his willingness to open negotiations on the most liberal basis. That letter wholly abandoned the attitude which the Government of the United States had maintained since the secession of South Carolina, and to which, according to the declaration of Mr. Seward in his recent speech at Auburn, it has returned of "no negotiations with rebels in arms." It expressed a readiness to open negotiations, and attempt to settle through diplomacy the questions which had been so long in vain submitted to the arbitrament of war. It did not even announce that the restoration of the Union was an indispensable condition of peace, but proffered a free and untrammeled conference. Had the correspondence closed at that point, it must have added strength to the administration of Mr. Lincoln, and thus increased its capacity to carry on the war. Within our own borders, it would have nourished the delusive and dangerous hope of a compromise with our enemy on terms consistent with liberty and self-respect. A renewed pressure would have been brought to bear on the President to send Commissioners to Washington with the view of opening negotiations, at the hazard of fresh indignities to the Confederacy.

WHAT THE REBELS DESIGNED.

In framing our reply to the letter of Mr. Greeley, we endeavored to shape it so as to compel such new developments from Mr. Lincoln as would disclose the true policy of his Administration, or such an adherence to the position assumed in that letter as would enable our Government to act upon it with safety. This purpose was fully accomplished in calling forth the celebrated document, addressed "To whom it may concern." No paper probably ever produced so great a revolution of public sentiment in the same space of time. Although a gross delusion as to the extent of their recent military successes has induced a reaction and secured the re-election of Mr. Lincoln, it is destined to exercise an enduring influence for good. It has permanently weakened and distracted the war party of the North, and there is much reason to hope that before many months intervene it will wholly deprive it of Democratic support. However this may be, it has united and animated our own people more than any political action of our adversaries since the commencement of the war.

A REBEL VIEW OF THE CANVASS OF 1864.

It has been suggested that the effect of this correspondence, by rendering probable the defeat of Mr. Lincoln at the polls, was unfavorable in the North-west, by repressing a growing tendency to revolution in that quarter. This was, no doubt, to some extent, its temporary effect, but it has worked no injury to our cause. The revolutionary element has been hitherto too feeble to be employed in our service with any advantage. Before this correspondence took place our sanguine friends in that region had fixed upon various periods of revolutionary outbreak, but they were deferred at their own instance from time to time, as the conviction gradually dawned upon their own minds of the extent to which they had exaggerated their strength. From all the developments which have since been made, I am satisfied that no explosion could have taken place previous to the election, which would not have resulted in permanent injury to our cause. The North-west is too loyal, and, without the systematic and possibly less continued application of the agencies which control the popular mind, may never be ripe for revolution. But it is fermenting with the passions, one of which revolutions have been created. In Illinois, Indiana, and possibly Ohio, a majority of the population are hostile to the present Administration. The recent elections furnished no evidence to the contrary, for with a large body of the peace party, McClellan was held in as much execration as Lincoln himself. The bitterness between these rival factions is intense. The one has received from the other every outrage which the strong can perpetrate on the weak. It would be a fatal mistake, in my opinion, to abandon all effort to separate this section from the United States, because no results have as yet been achieved commensurate with our expectations. The hope of closing the war by negotiation has been extinguished. Our resources are diminishing more rapidly, for obvious reasons, than those of our enemy. To keep alive such a degree of apprehension as will lead to the concentration of large bodies of troops to repress insurrections within their own lines, will, or itself, be an important diversion in our favor. We should employ money and talent without stint, to fire this brooding resentment the proportions of a speedy and civil strife. Let us preserve our communication with our friends in the North. Warned by our past experience, let us introduce arms more gradually and cautiously, as far as practicable subsidize leading Presses, and through the ordinary channel of newspapers, as well as of campaign documents, enlighten and influence the public mind. Enlist public men of character and influence, whose principles and sympathies are with us, by indemnifying them against the hazards to which bold and decisive action may expose them. With arms, leaders, and, an opportunity, we could strike a deadly blow.

It is proper to add that I have expressed only my individual opinions, and do not know to what extent they would meet the concurrence of Messrs. Clay and Thompson.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, JAMES P. HOLCOMBE.

RICHMOND, Nov. 16, 1864.

Here ends a plain, concise, but fully-accurate recital of Mr. Greeley's peace conference. Does it show him fit to be President of this people? Especially, is he fit—he, the slave of ambition and vanity and the dupe of flattery—to maintain in the Presidential chair the honor and interests of the country against the rebel Democracy, by whom, if by any, he must be elected? They frightened and fooled him in '60 and '61; they fooled and frightened him again in '64. Will they, or will they not, control him, if they can make him President now?

A Republican Ratification in Savannah Attacked—Large Numbers Wounded—Greeley's Friends the Assailants.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAVANNAH, Ga., July 30.—An attempt was made here last night to break up the Grant ratification meeting. The hall was surrounded by several hundred armed men, who fired into the hall. The firing continued for half an hour from without and within. Several hundred shots were discharged, and a large number were wounded. The police were unable to control the mob.

A Democratic Leader Out for the Republican Ticket, National and State—Sentiment in Southern Indiana.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 30.—Hon. Jason B. Brown, a Democratic State Senator, and the acknowledged leader of the party as a member of the Legislature during the past ten years, delivered a speech, today, at Medora, Brown County, in which he announced that he had severed his connection with the Democratic-Greeley combination, and came out squarely for the Republican National and State tickets. Mr. Brown is a resident of the New-Albany District, represented in Congress by M. C. Kerr. As a leader and orator, he is a man of influence, and his course is significant as an indication of the feeling of the Democracy of Southern Indiana.

At Terre Haute the Irishmen have organized under a resolution that they will die in their tracks rather than to defeat the Democratic tickets at the Fall elections.

Hon. R. W. Thompson, of Vigo County, will address the Grant Clubs of this city to-morrow night. A very large meeting is anticipated. Senator Trimbell, of Illinois, makes a speech to the Democrats the same evening.

WATERTOWN.

Enthusiastic Republican Ratification Meeting—The Grant and Wilson Club.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WATERTOWN, July 30.—The Republicans had a splendid Grant and Wilson ratification meeting last evening, in Washington Hall, to hear Hon. Elisu H. Roberts, of Utica. The hall was packed with enthusiastic Republicans, notwithstanding a heavy rain just before assembling, and many people were turned away for want of room to enter. Mr. Roberts held the close attention of the sea of upturned faces for two hours in a speech of telling effect, and unanswerable argument. This is the opening meeting of the campaign for Grant and Wilson, and was a grand success. The Grant and Wilson Club here is a strong organization, numbering between seven and eight hundred, and is well officered. Alexander Campbell, President; John C. Knowlton, First Vice-President; Orin C. Frost, Corresponding Secretary; A. D. Slover, Recording Secretary; E. M. Gates, Treasurer, with an Executive Committee of nine, headed by Senator Morris Winslow. Large use club furnished soul-inspiring music, and the brass band never tires. Watertown is awake, and old Jefferson will show she is neither tired or bewildered in well doing.

Broome County Aroused—Enthusiastic Grant and Wilson Ratification Meeting—Over Four Thousand People Present.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BINGHAMTON, July 30.—The largest and most enthusiastic political meeting ever held in Broome County assembled here this evening. Speeches were made by Gen. C. H. Van Wyck and Hon. E. H. Prindle. More than 4,000 people were present. The call signed last week by more than 1,450 people is daily extending.

RALEIGH, July 30.—Grave fears are still entertained of what effect the machinations of Wood and Blumenberg, in pursuance of the instructions of Ethan Allen, may have upon the vote of the State. It is not known what these instructions were, but there is no doubt about what these men are doing. There has been a division of labor—Wood taking the arrangements for challenging under his supervision, but, of course, doing none of it himself, as it must be done by a citizen of the State. Blumenberg may also have been posting verdant Democrats how the thing can be worked, but he has separated from Wood, as he was seen alone at noon today in an exceeding nervous condition, as he is conscious a close watch is being kept upon his movements. It is believed that his special mission is to make away with registration books, but so far as has been ascertained he has not yet succeeded in abstracting any of them. At Weldon he was betraying himself to the most casual observer; he was forcing himself into conversation with everybody, and announcing himself as a native of the place, which was an evident falsehood. The whereabouts of Wood are not known, and the fact that he has not been seen for several days causes the only anxiety that is felt for the result of the election.

REPUBLICAN CONFIDENCE.

Confidence, has, however, been greatly increased during the day. Cheering indications have been returned from many parts to which Col. Young's circular telegram was sent yesterday, that Republicans are fully alive everywhere to the crisis, and will not permit themselves to be disfranchised by captious challenging. It is now thought that the Republicans cannot be swindled out of more than 5,000 votes by this Tammany trick, and that even with this loss they will still carry the State by from 8,000 to 10,000 majority. Letters continue to be received from every quarter of the State, showing large Republican gains from the registration of voters who have heretofore remained at home, as well as accessions from the ranks of the more moderate Democrats.

A BOWL DISPOSED OF.

A great bowl is being made about the letter from Bishop Hood to Senator Pool, which has been published, in which it is said that 800 negroes have been registered in the Fifth Congressional District. This letter is entirely genuine, as it was picked up by some Democratic sneak thief out of Senator Pool's waste-basket after it had been carried from his room. Its statements are wholly true, but the assumption that its 800 are fraudulent is as base as it is groundless, as all these men are legal voters, who have heretofore been kept from the polls by the Kuklux. If the Democrats could have stolen all the letters from every part of the State containing similar statements received by Senator Pool, they would have been dumbfounded. They must have got an idea of the contents of some of them, as it is impossible today to get hold of one of them here, notwithstanding the activity of Wood and Blumenberg.

HOW THEY DO IT.

They are desperate, however, and here today have got up the challenging fraud, marking the names of many citizens who have always voted heretofore unquestioned. Saturday, the register in one ward, in defiance of law, went off with the book and refuses to permit registration at all. Several negroes, who were determined not to be disfranchised, went to his house, but finding he was not at home, tracked him to the woods outside of town, where he was hiding, and compelled him to register them. This incident is a fair sample of the desperate measures being resorted to for the purpose of making North Carolina speak for Greeley on Thursday. They will hardly accomplish that result, but fears are entertained that the bitterness they are engendering will cause serious disorder.

TROUBLE ANTICIPATED.

No one expects election day to pass without bloodshed; and I have heard it estimated that, taking the whole State, there will be at least 100 serious affrays. Republicans are counseled only to stand firm for their rights, and will in very rare cases be the aggressors in the affrays.

THE REPUBLICAN CIRCULAR.

In order that the spirit of the instructions may be seen, I append the circular sent out today by J. C. L. Harris, Secretary of the Republican Committee:

"Democrats and so-called Liberals are desperate; they are conscious that defeat stares them in the face. Consequently, fifteen or twenty thieves, penitentiary convicts, detectives, ballot-box stuffers, men of the blackest and most damnable character, have been sent to this State for the purpose of intimidating voters, stuffing ballot-boxes, destroying the registration lists, stealing and destroying registration books; lastly, to captiously and without warrant of law challenge a sufficient number of registered voters to delay voting on election day, and thus prevent Republicans from voting. Reliable intelligence enables me to say that a conspiracy of attempt is on foot to captiously and illegally challenge Republican voters in such numbers as will prevent hundreds from voting. This is a dying attempt of the Democrats to carry North Carolina. These men are convinced that a free and fair election will result in a glorious Republican triumph; hence fraud, intimidation, dishonest and unmeasurable means are to be used to prevent Republicans from voting, and in the way thwart the will of the people, and introduce the infamous practices of the Tammany Democracy of New-York City into elections in this State. Evidence of villainy is mountain high. It must be detected and defeated. I call upon every man, especially Republicans, who reads this paper, before the election is over, to see to it that every legal registered voter exercises his right of suffrage. Call upon the poll-holders and judges of election to disregard captious challenges. Watch the polls; take down the name of witnesses to every effort at intimidation and captious challenging, so be need hereafter. A free and fair election will defeat the Democrats. See to it that every Republican votes."

MEETINGS YESTERDAY.

The Republicans continue enthusiastic. Everywhere today immense meetings have been held. That at Warrenton was addressed by Fred. Douglass, Hon. C. L. Thomas, and Col. T. L. Hargrave, candidate for Attorney-General; that at Stanley was addressed by Gen. Brogden, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, and Gen. Harriman, of New-Hampshire; at Alamance, Hon. Samuel F. Phillips made a powerful argument. At Oxford, Newbern and other points to-night great meetings were held. The Democrats have also had several meetings, the principal being at Concord, where Seburn repeated his funeral oration over the Democratic Party, assisted by Parson Thomson and Walker, the carpet-bagger Governor of Virginia. The party had just come from Charlotte, where the Democratic newspaper had spoken of Gen. Harrian as "so-called" and "self-styled," and had thus expressed its sentiments on another subject:

A BLAST FROM A GREELEY ORGAN.

"We hope to see the day when the whipping-post will be again set up in North Carolina, and villains and rascals, white or black, get their deserts on their bare backs. An honest man does not fear the whipping-post. The Puritanical Yankee can kill his wife, or children, or father, or work poor white children, without any quivering of conscience; but when you talk to him about the whipping-post he rolls his eyes in horror at such 'barbarism.' Miserable hypocrites! How can they escape everlasting punishment?" This paper is not for Greeley.

Thus the fight approaches its close. Never did army in line of battle feel more confident of victory than do the Republican hosts of North Carolina to-night. But for the Blumenberg gang, with instructions from New-York, that victory would be crushing. As it is, these jail-birds may succeed in saving enough of Democracy to re-form its lines for November. From all we have heard up to this hour they can scarcely do more. E. C.

Confirmation of the Stealing of the Lists—Whose Money the Unscrupulous Knaves are Spending.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The news of the stealing of registration lists in North Carolina by Wood and Blumenberg, Mr. Greeley's carpet-baggers, is authenticated by information received here. In Halifax County, where the negro majority is about 2,000, the lists have, it is said, been stolen. This is a new species of fraud invented by Tammany for the latitude of North Carolina. Wood and Blumenberg have plenty of money, and there is little doubt it comes of a subscription of $10,000 to the Liberal Republican Committee by A. T. Stewart. A gentleman who claims to have seen the letter is positive about its contents. He says Mr. Stewart enclosed a check for $10,000, and told the Committee, if it should find itself sorely pressed, to draw on him for $10,000 more. If this statement does Mr. Stewart injustice, it is much to be regretted; but it comes directly from the Liberal Committee head-quarters, and comes with the stamp of truth.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Sayles J. Bowen's Slander Upon the President Discussed or—He is Convicted of Falsehood by Himself.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—A letter is published here from an attorney, W. A. Cook, Esq., in reply to Sayles J. Bowen's letter in regard to the I-street house. Mr. Cook was intimate with Bowen at the time of the transaction, and drew up the release of the property to Gen. Sherman, and took it, in company with Bowen, to the President and Gen. Sherman, and also to be recorded. Cook gives a history of these transactions, with which he was connected, and then adds:

"The World some time afterward contained an article severely reflecting on the President in connection with the transaction alluded to in Mr. Bowen's letter. He promptly drew up a reply, vindicating the President from the censure of the World, with the intention of publishing it. The publication was incidentally delayed until it was deemed unnecessary to publish it. It was in my possession till a few months ago, when he requested me to send it to him, and in company with Mr. Wm. E. Nott I left it at his residence. A copy of it may hereafter be found among my papers."

The Chronicle, which has heretofore been a supporter of Bowen, this morning turns against him and charges him with the very things that it defended him against when he was running for Mayor the last time there was a Mayor chosen.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Five Emigrant Passengers Killed—The Train Runs Into a Wash-Out—List of the Killed and Wounded.

BROOKVILLE, Kansas, July 30.—A passenger-train on the Kansas Pacific Railroad, going west, yesterday morning, met with an accident at Coon Creek Station, over 100 miles west of here, by which five immigrant passengers were killed and several employes of the road injured. Among the killed was Miss Ann Riley, and among the injured were Mr. Kidder, express messenger, and a baggage-master named Wallace. The cause of the disaster was the destruction of a bridge by a "cloud-burst."

DENVER, Col., July 30.—A terrible accident occurred at about 1 o'clock yesterday morning, on the Kansas Pacific Railroad, 113 miles east of this place. The westward bound passenger-train, consisting of two sleeping-cars, one first-class and one second class coach, and the baggage and express-cars, ran through the bridge over Cook Creek. The entire train, except the sleeping-cars, was wrecked. Five persons were killed outright. A number were wounded, some of whom will probably die. The killed were all in the second-class car.

The killed are: John Berger and wife, German emigrants; they leave two help-less children. Susan Riley, from Ireland, on her way to relations residing here; a German girl, name unknown; niece of Berger; John Schwegriet, residence not stated.

The wounded are: Marie Leschrenky, aged eighteen, hip badly crushed; John McLaughlin, least boy, seriously; Edward Manville, of H

THE PRISON CONGRESS.

From a Special Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, July 20, 1872.

One of the interesting events of the Congress was Dr. Bellows' address on the "Life and Labors of John Howard." It was an exceedingly impressive and eloquent oration, and was well received by both the foreign and English delegates. The Roman Catholic Archbishop, Dr. Manning, presided, and said a few most earnest and admirable words in a quiet, penetrating tone, which reached the furthest corner of the great hall. This example of a Catholic prelate taking part in humanitarian movements is one which the American Romanist clergy would do well to ponder upon. Dr. Bellows touched the key-note of the Congress: Humanity—mercy toward even the guilty, as the means of his reformation.

There is a prevalent tone in England now—and it was heard often in this Congress—that the duty of justice to the criminal is to punish, not to reform; that philanthropy has been overdone, and mere barbarous and deterrent punishments are needed; that the prisoner is often treated better than the virtuous unfortunate. No doubt, in this last objection there is some force, but the proper remedy would seem to be to treat the pauper better, not the prisoner worse. The truth is, society, and, above all, society in England, cannot get off by coolly handing over the criminal to punishment, and saying, "He has chosen crime; let him take the penalties!" When one thinks of the hundreds of thousands of human beings in London and every large English town who have never had any fair chance in the world; who have lived packed in tenement-rooms and amid nothing but examples of vice; who have had no education and no opportunity for any; who have been from birth starving and poverty-stricken, amid mines of wealth, and have been started in life without a single advantage in their favor—it seems anything but the proper tone in English gentlemen, who have received everything from fortune, to coolly hand over these on their first offence against law, to bitter penalty, and say that first of all "punishment is to punish." When society has first done all her duty to the outcast, she may begin to say "justice first, and reform afterward!" Besides, all who argue for enlightened systems of punishment and reform, maintain that it more profitable to society to turn the criminal out from prison a better man than he entered it, than merely to make him suffer.

Punishment under any aspect is deterrent to evil-doers, but society has more to gain by preventing each criminal from continuing in evil courses, than by attempting to deter others by extreme penalties. One of the worst features in the criminal classes of all countries, is the incessant repetitions of certain crimes by the same persons. Light punishments, with no reformatory influences, and too severe and barbarous penalties, both tend to produce the recidivistes, or "revolvers" in crime. England has been immensely impressed by a recent decrease in the crime of garroting, owing to flogging being administered for it. The connection of the two events, as cause and effect, is by no means certain. But if the relation is real, it is of little importance in the science of punishment. On the broad scale, brutality of punishment makes brutal crimes, or is associated with them, and tends to repetition of crimes. The human being is brutalized under them. He comes out from the prison harder, more bitter against society, less virtuous and with less hope than he went in. He is a worse man, a poorer citizen. The "cat" or the treadmill breaks down his hope and his self-respect, and he has nothing after his release to sustain him against temptation. He violates the law again because the spring of his mind is crushed, and crime is almost natural to him.

Under the English system and under the necessity the prison directors feel, of excluding profitable industrial labor, the number of repeaters of crime is fearful. Fearing to burden the outside producers by cheaper prison productions, they burden them in another way by heavy taxes for prison support.

The British delegates were amazed to hear from Gen. Pillsbury, of Albany, that he had carried on various prisons not only without expense to the public, but saving a handsome surplus for permanent purposes, and that, in his experience, teaching a man a trade saved him from repetition of crime. Similar experiences from Massachusetts, of self-supporting prisons, were detailed, and produced a deep impression.

Count Sollohorb, Director of a large prison in Moscow, stated that in three months he could give a man a trade; that the prisoner became better under it, and out of the thousands he sent forth annually, less than one per cent. repeated their offenses, or came under the law again.

The Times has recently reported the death of an aged man in Edinburgh, who had been convicted 250 times. The Liverpool Magistrates report that during six months in 1871, their borough jail received 390 prisoners, each of whom had been committed at least fifteen times, and four of whom seventy times or upward! And yet all the English journals in commenting on this Congress, speak in a tone of quiet congratulation of their admirable prison system, and seem to have not an idea of its defects. The Times (July 16) even alludes to the British prisons as "mainly self-supporting," which is absurdly incorrect, as every well-informed journalist ought to know. The earnings of all the prisoners in England are stated, on good authority, to be less than a shilling a week.

THE IRISH PRISON SYSTEM.

This admirable reform in the prison system, which was considered by the delegates from the Continent and America as the greatest advance yet made in the science of punishment and reform, was evidently not received with much enthusiasm by the majority of the English delegates. The social science people, who convened the Congress, would hardly give Sir Walter Crofton a hearing. Under this system the prisoner, on his first committal, is put on low diet and in solitary confinement for some three months, with no labor, or merely drudge-labor. In this condition his mind is thought to be brought into a proper condition to consider his offenses, and to understand the features of the treatment to which he is about to be submitted. When this first probation is finished he is placed in the first stage of imprisonment, where the duration of his sentence will in part depend on the "marks" he receives for conduct, industry and subordination. Here he is permitted also to earn a certain "gratuity" every week. Marks are given for industry in school as well as at work, and there are three "classes" in this stage, through which he passes step by step. Under this method the convict is placed day by day under the same influences which stimulate men in the outer world. He is not alone submitting to severe penalty; he has hope; he can improve his condition by his conduct and his industry; he is learning a remunerative employment; he is saving for himself a fund wherewith to begin anew when he is finally released. He is brought daily under mental and moral instruction; all his best faculties are called out.

If he chooses to be mulish and [illegible] he goes back to his dull, monotonous round of penalties, and serves thus his full time. But even this is not enough under the Crofton system. The prisoner's virtues may be too mechanical. He is now placed where more is left to his self-control. He is put in the "intermediate prison," where more is intrusted to his own responsibility, and he is more at liberty. The most remarkable instance of this is at Lusk, near Dublin. Here seventy men are employed in the open fields under only five warders in severe labor, and returning to confined quarters. They can easily escape or overpower their keepers. Yet there is almost never a run-away, and a magistrate (Mr. Cobbe) living near by, states that in twelve years, these convicts have never committed an offense in the neighborhood. They are often sent to Dublin on errands, and they are allowed besides their gratuity a small sum every week to spend as they choose.

Should they at any time disobey orders, they must return to the former stages of punishment. This year of confinement is thus a constant test of their self-control. The value of the "marks" to them may be judged from the fact that a sentence of fifteen years can, by perfect conduct, thus be reduced to ten, and of seven years to four. After this year, the convict goes forth under a "ticket-of-leave," which leaves him under the supervision of the police, and makes him liable to return to his full sentence, if he commit any offense. This portion of the system has undoubtedly not been well managed in England, and has created some of the prejudice which exists against the whole reform. In Ireland, however, it has worked admirably, and the numbers of the convicts fell from 3,983 in 1854—the date of its introduction—to 1,228 in 1871.

There are some elements in this Irish system which could be improved, undoubtedly—as for instance, the too great aggregation of convicts on Spike Island. But on the whole, it is the greatest step yet made in the science and practice of penology.

THE LEONARD-STREET FIRE.

The Fire-Marshal's Investigation—List of Insurances.

Fire-Marshal McSpedon was busily engaged yesterday in making a thorough investigation into the origin of the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the Union Steam Sugar Refinery in Leonard-street, on Monday. A number of witnesses, including the engineer and the watchman, who were in the building when the fire broke out, were examined, but their testimony, though showing how the fire was discovered, failed to throw any light on the manner in which it originated. The investigation will be continued.

The building, which belonged to the estate of the late Wm. Curtis Noyes, was valued at $50,000, and will prove a total loss. The loss is only partially covered by insurance.

At about 1 o'clock yesterday morning a portion of the east-side wall of the building fell on the roof of the tenement-house No. 74 West Broadway, crushing into the apartments of M. Fromme, whose family were asleep at the time. The members of the family had a miraculous escape from serious injury and death, and although the contents of the apartments were utterly wrecked, no person was injured. Superintendent Macgregor, of the Building Department, was notified of the unsafe condition of the walls, and they will either be utterly demolished or shored up so as to render them safe.

The Knife and Bludgeon at Work.

At a late hour on Monday night George Schmitt, of No. 908 Third-avenue, and Frederick Kimball, of Fourth-avenue and Fifty-first-street, became engaged in an altercation, at the corner of Fifty-first-street and Lexington-avenue, during which Schmitt stabbed Kimball in the right arm and thigh with a large blade pocket-knife, inflicting severe wounds. Kimball was taken to his home, and Schmitt was locked up.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning, Libert Lipp, aged fifty-two, of No. 350 Third-avenue, while standing in front of his residence was assaulted by a man named Brookhouse, who stabbed him in the neck and back with a large knife, causing severe wounds. Lipp was attended by Police Surgeon Waterman and sent to Bellevue Hospital. Brookhouse escaped, and is still at large.

At 2 o'clock yesterday morning, during an altercation between Henry Decker, aged thirty-eight, of No. 35 Chrystie-street, and Edward Becker, of No. 212 Canal-street, Decker was severely beaten about the head. He was attended by Police Surgeon Saville and sent to his home. Becker was not arrested.

James Dunn, aged Fifty-eight, of No. 250 East Eleventh-street, and Patrick Hanley, aged forty, of No. 240 East Eleventh-street, quarreled yesterday morning, and Hanley struck Dunn on the head with a brass-iron, causing severe wounds. Dunn was attended by Police Surgeon Bradley and sent to his home. Hanley was arrested and locked up.

At 11 o'clock yesterday morning John Burns and Stephen Maloney quarreled at their residence, No. 150 East Thirty-ninth-street, and during the frenzy which ensued Maloney stabbed Burns in the left hand with a carving-knife, wounding him severely. Maloney was arrested.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon Patrick Derwin, aged thirty-five, of No. 338 East Eleventh-street, and Patrick Hughes, of No. 115 Meadow-street, Hoboken, became engaged in a quarrel while in the liquor-store of James Fulton, No. 340 East Eleventh-street, and during a scuffle which ensued Hughes drew a pocket-knife and stabbed Derwin in the left breast near the region of the heart, inflicting a serious wound. Derwin was taken to his home and Dr. Sheppard was called to attend him. Hughes was arrested by Officer McArdle, of the Seventeenth Precinct, and locked up.

Sane or Insane—Were the Jurors and Doctors Deceived?

It will be remembered that in the Spring of 1871, William Chambers was put on his trial in Kings County for the murder of a Mr. Voothis, a prominent builder of Brooklyn. The prisoner was defended by Mr. William F. Howe, who successfully interposed on his client's behalf the plea of insanity. On being acquitted, Chambers was sent to the Lunatic Asylum by order of Judge Joseph F. Barnard, and there he has since remained. At the last term of the Court of General Sessions, a similar case to that of Chambers came on for trial, in which James Burns was charged with the murder of Patrick Halloran in the "Gothic" saloon in the Bowery. In this case also, Mr. Howe was counsel for the prisoner, and again successfully interposed the plea of insanity. Burns, on his acquittal, was also sent to the Lunatic Asylum.

Yesterday, Mr. Howe appeared before Judge Pratt, in Supreme Court, Chambers, and upon petitions of both Chambers and Burns, in which each swears not only that he is sane now, but was sane at the time of trial, moved for writs of habeas corpus to bring up the prisoners on a motion to discharge them on the ground that the Court was without jurisdiction, at the time of trial.

Judge Pratt granted both writs, taking them returnable this morning.

ENGLAND.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, July 20, 1872.

The end of the Parliamentary session is already in sight, and weary legislators are beginning to draw breath and to think with pleasant expectation of the moors and the mountains, or [illegible]. The 10th of August is fixed for the prorogation, the "measure of the innocents," as the abandoned bills are called, and members of both Houses are already preparing for their departure. Some of them, indeed, are already on the wing. The House of Lords presents a beggarly array of empty benches. Its work for the year is practically over. It must still go on meeting, as a matter of form, and pass bills sent up from the Lower House, through their final stages. But its sittings will now be little more than formal. Possibly, however, there may be a short debate on Monday on the treatment of Dr. Hooker, of Kew, by Mr. Ayrton, the Chief Commissioner of Public Works. Lord Derby has undertaken to bring on the question in the interest of Dr. Hooker, and Mr. Ayrton has not much chance of mercy from their Lordships. Sir John Lubbock, the banker and author of a well-known work on "Pre-Historic Man," is to raise the question in the Commons, of course on the side of Dr. Hooker. On Thursday next the great Home Rule Kossuth's judgment on the Galway election is to come up in the Lower House. It is said that the Government will not propose a motion of censure, but it is difficult to see how they can avoid doing so, and it is probable that at the Cabinet Council today one will be agreed upon. The feeling here is very strong against the priests, and so far in favor of Keogh, but those who know anything of the man and who recollect his antecedents as originally a protégé of the priests, and a satellite of Sadlier, the unscrupulous adventurer, who poisoned himself some years ago on Hampstead Heath, are not very much charmed by the association of political freedom with such a champion. I understand that Cardinal Cullen has communicated to the Government that he has no objection to the priests being prosecuted, but would rather desire it, in order that the calumnies of the Judge may be refuted. It is tolerably certain that if the priests are prosecuted no Irish jury will be found to convict them.

WHAT IS SPIRITUAL INTIMIDATION?

That the priests broke the law in this instance is clear enough; but they will certainly be wiser next time, and it is difficult to say how far spiritual intimidation can be dealt with by law. An interesting controversy or triangular duel on the subject is going on between an able writer in the Pall Mall, who is understood to be Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, the late legal member of the Indian Council at Calcutta; Prof. Beesley, and one W. R. Greg, who is officially at the head of the Government Stationery Office, but who is best known, under his initials, as a keen and vigorous controversialist. The first of the three began by laying down the law that the Catholic priests are quacks of the same kind as gypsy fortune-tellers, and should be treated to the same summary justice. The State, he argued, had an absolute right to determine the limits within which any Church should be free to act, and it was necessary that spiritual threats should be prohibited by law. Prof. Beesley, as a positivist, felt bound to stand up for the freedom of "organized public opinion." He could see no difference between the warnings of the priests, that if electors voted in a particular way, they would expose themselves to the vengeance of Heaven, and the predictions of Conservative alarmists, that the election of a Radical candidate would lead to the ruin of the country. There ought, he held, to be perfect freedom to advise and warn electors as to the consequences of their votes. "W. R. G.," admitting that the despotic authority of the priesthood was excessive and injurious, and ought to be checked, pointed out the difficulty of defining spiritual intimidation so as to bring it into the same category with the intimidation of a landlord who threatens to oust a tenant from his holding, or of a man who threatens personal violence, and suggested that the only way to deal with the Catholics was to regard them as the subjects of a foreign Prince, and take care (he did not say how) that they should not acquire a predominant influence in Parliament. In his last article, Mr. Stephen seems to hit the right nail on the head. If the advice given, he says, is bona fide advice, it is legal, but advice which is a command in disguise would be illegal; and the question would therefore be whether the voter were put in fear of a consequence which depended on the will of his class leader, or whether he was really advised. No doubt there is an obvious distinction between saying to a man, "Don't go that road, for the ford is swollen or the bridge broken down, or there are robbers in ambush, and you will come to grief," and saying, "If you go that way, and not this way, as I tell you, I will pitch you into the river or put a bullet through you." But this does not quite settle the difficulty as to the intimidation of the Roman Catholic priests, who would, of course, maintain that they had been threatening nothing on their own account, but only explaining what they believed God Almighty would do. If, they would say, we believe these people are on the way to hell, is it not kind—is it not our duty—to warn them in good time? The whole subject is surrounded with difficulties, and the worst that can happen will be that an ultra Protestant panic should be raised, and that any attempt should be made to tamper with religious and political freedom for the sake of fighting the clerical despots with their own weapons. A few days ago a meeting of the chief English Roman Catholics, including Archbishop Manning, Mgr. Capel, the young Duke of Norfolk, Lord Howard, of Glossop, &c., was held in London, to denounce the Italian and German Governments for their hostility to the Jesuits and other religious orders. The speeches were of rather a violent character. Victor Emmanuel and Prince Bismarck came in for some pretty epithets. Lord Denbigh quoted with much gusto the French saying, "that he who ate the Pope died of indigestion," and prophesied that this last act would shake the Colossus of Germany to its foundations. Prince Bismarck has not yet threatened war against England for this outbreak. It appears that the speakers at this meeting either forgot or did not choose to remember that the Jesuits were declared to be extirpated and abolished by Pope Clement XIV.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT AND HOME RULE IN IRELAND.

It is unfortunate that no great Irish measure is ever carried except under the apparent influence of apprehensions of rebellion and civil strife. It will be recollected that Mr. Gladstone confessed that Fenianism had directed attention to the Irish chart and land tenure questions; and the Home Rule movement, a kind of bastard Fenianism, worked by the priesthood to frighten the authorities, now seems likely to be the means of procuring another great boon to Ireland. Lord Harrington, the Irish Secretary, has made a very significant speech in the House of Commons. He said that the very small amount of time given by Parliament to Irish questions supplied an argument in favor of Home Rule, and he hinted that the Government thought of taking the wind out of the sails of that movement by proposing to buy up the Irish railways and introduce better and cheaper traveling for the benefit of the people. There is something to be said for this project, perhaps. The railways at present are grossly mismanaged; they are in the hands of a swarm of directors, engineers, and other officials, who suck all the profits and starve the lines in order that they may put the money in their own pockets; and the industry of the country suffers from the depredations of this flock of harpies. It might be worth while for the State to try the experiment of taking the Irish railways into its own hands, but it is certainly undeniable that this idea should appear to be adopted as the result of the Home Rule agitation. It will only confirm the impression of the Irish that they can get anything they like for the sum of threatening language. The value of the concessions [illegible]

THE RISE IN PRICES—THE WOMEN OF ARMS.

The general rise in prices is becoming a very serious question for the country. As was to be expected, the movement is becoming universal; and if there should be a hard Winter, we may make up our minds for disturbances in various quarters. Already there is a bitter outcry about the dearness of butchers' meat; and the women are taking an active part in the agitation. The women of Netherton, Dudley, in the "Black Country," as the coal and iron district round Birmingham is called, have passed a resolution to buy no meat until it is retailed at fourpence per pound. It appears that they are determined to carry out their threat, and the butchers are beginning to reduce their supplies. On Thursday evening a large anti-dear meeting was held at Birmingham for the purpose of entering into consideration the extortionate price of meat, and demanding a reduction of prices. The meeting was attended by persons of both the middle and the working classes, but the latter were in the majority. In the mining districts of Northumberland, the colliers' wives have for some weeks been training themselves for battle, in a series of lectures and drills against the tradesmen and the artisans who are passing into Lancashire. Gangs of women have been held in the Wigan district, and resolutions have been passed to abstain from the use of beef and mutton until prices have been reduced to sixpence or sevenpence a pound. It seems that the men do not go very cheerfully with this movement, and domestic broils have been the result. In one case, some of the Newcastle colliers, not relishing the prospect of Lenten fare, interfered and dispersed a meeting of the women by force. The female orators are, of course, very severe on the selfishness and cowardice of the men. If the present dearness would only learn the working classes to turn their resources to better account, it would be in the end rather a gain than a loss. A great many of them live wretchedly enough on dried herrings, tea, or a decoction so called, and bread; but the average cost of an English working man's family is about double that of a Scotch family of the same grade, and three times that of a French or German family, and after all is perhaps hardly so well fed. The English working classes know nothing of broth or porridge, and would turn up their noses at either. Australian beef, which is now imported in great quantities, is not very pretty in point of taste, but in the sample it has served, tastes are palatable enough. Yet it is with the greatest difficulty that the people who are protesting against the extortionate demands of the butchers can be persuaded to give the preserved meats a trial. Even in the work-houses, the paupers have in more than one instance mutinied on this account. By the way, an official inquiry has just taken place with regard to the cost of the pauper commissariat in London; and it may, perhaps, interest you to know how prices range. The contracts were made in the Spring of last year, and from ten to twenty per cent. should, perhaps, be added to bring the scale up to the present high market rates. The figures of the list are as follows: Mutton, per stone, from 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; beef, 5s. to 5s. 4d.; legs and shins of beef, 2s. 6d. to 2s. 8d.; flour, per sack, 47s. 9d. to 48s. 6d.; milk, per gallon, 1s. 6d. to 1s.; potatoes, per ton, 41s. 3d. to 120s.; bread, per hundred weight, 15s. 3d. to 16s. 6d.; butter, 60s. to 116s.; sugar, 34s. 6d. to 40s.; tea, per pound, 2s. 3d. to 3s.; household coal, per ton, 14s. to 20s. 3d. It will be observed that there is a considerable discrepancy in the prices, but it may be assumed that on the whole they approximate pretty closely to wholesale prices on account of the large quantities purchased, and that on the average they represent the rates at the cheapest market. The milk supply is reported to be very bad, being diluted with water so as to destroy the character of the beverage. The best that can be said of it is that it contains nothing absolutely poisonous. It is asserted that a considerable portion of the work-house butter consists of margarine (fat horse fat, in which large quantities are shipped off regularly to Hamburg, to return made up into what is termed in the trade "boat butter." Altogether the present derangement of prices is very trying for all classes, and can hardly fail to affect trade. Iron, coals, gas, glass, meat, butter, &c., are all mounting steadily, and the rise in one necessary of life inevitably entails a rise in other directions. The ferry-boats on the rivers now charge twopence, and the railways threaten to raise their fares. F. H. J.

BOATING.

Rowing Notes.

The Fall, or late Summer, season in boating promises to eclipse the most brilliant record of any preceding year. A circular has been issued calling for a convention of all amateur boating organizations throughout the country, to be held in the City Aug. 28, for the purpose of establishing proper and definite rules for the government of amateur races, and regattas; also, to fix the status of the oarsmen now rowing as amateurs. This, however, will prove a rather delicate subject to handle, and if carried with too high a hand, smacking in any way of English prejudices, such as supposed differences in the various grades of society, or casting strong doubts upon men who have been active members of leading boat organizations, and who have rowed, without objections being raised, in the numerous races and regattas of the past, we predict that the most influential clubs will withdraw, (if they enter at all,) and ignore the rules of the Convention. In order to insure harmony and success, the various boat clubs in the principal cities—New-York, Philadelphia, Albany, Boston, &c.—must take a prominent part in this undertaking, as nearly all the boating interest rests with them. Out of fifty-seven signatures affixed to the circular in question, we find but two from clubs of note in the Metropolis, and but few from others in the vicinity. It is to be hoped that a union of the leading clubs may be effected, and a good set of racing laws adopted, as a national regatta once established will prove most interesting and beneficial. But this amateur question must be handled with extreme caution, and none but bare and positive proofs be accepted if a man's name is brought before the amateur tribunal for decision.

The various clubs on the Harlem River are about to unite with the intention of getting up a grand Metropolitan regatta on the Henley plan. The Gramercy, the oldest and most active club in that locality, is said to be the only one out of the nine ten Clubs which go to make up the union and co-operation. The plan is worthy the support of all who have the boating interest truly at heart, and little doubts, prejudices, and personal feelings should be overcome to assist in so important an undertaking. The Gramercys are a lively and warm-hearted set, and the natural reserve and Austere of the Potomac in the outset, will, if they once get fairly and lasting friendship, it is to be hoped that the ice partly melted by means of their late race, may be effectually broken, and that those two very prominent Clubs may join hands in the laudable enterprise alluded to above.

The boat clubs within the boundary of the Golden State are already talking of a regatta, to be held at Sacramento during the State Fair in September. California can no longer be overlooked in boating matters, as each successive season shows a numerous increase in the ranks of the aquatic fraternity, and new clubs are constantly forming.

It is also stated that efforts are being made to get up a regatta at Yonkers on the Hudson, but nothing definite has been made public.

The several challenges which our readers have read from time to time, are still unanswered, but the culminating point is near at hand. Several prominent boating-men were in favor of raising sufficient funds among clubs of this city, to enable an amateur, or amateurs, to purchase a substantial prize to be competed for among the representatives of the contributors, the victor of the race to become entitled to the amateur championship of the United States, and all those refusing to enter the lists are forever to hold their peace.

Mr. R. B. Decker, who recently challenged his late antagonist, George Roseblands, and also Dr. Russell Withers, says that he is perfectly willing to enter into the above arrangements, but insists upon a match race first.

Mr. James O'Reilly, of Troy, has a challenge standing to row any amateur oarsman in this country, and as none have responded, he rightfully claims the championship of the United States.

John Kyle, the builder of the several boat-houses adjoining his premises, is getting up a regatta, which will be held on the Hudson River early in September.

A number of compositors in the employ of the firm of Leonard, Hay and Coffin will row a series of races on the Harlem River, on Saturday afternoon next.

A Bowery Dealer Committed on a Charge of Receiving Stolen Goods.

James Cassidy, of No. 181 Bowery, was arrested on Monday on a charge of receiving stolen goods. It appears that some New-York thieves have been operating in Boston Town. Mr. Edward E. Tait, one of their victims, was robbed of a valuable watch and chain, which were traced to Cassidy. Detective Tully, failing to induce Cassidy to produce the watch, or make satisfactory excuse for the disappearance, procured a warrant for his arrest. Justice Ong, on bail being given, allowed the culprit until Friday to return the watch or produce the goods to Mr. Tait, or be committed.

Paradise

From Our Own Correspondent.

SCHROON LAKE, Monday, July 29, 1872.

It is quite easy to understand why so little comparatively is known of this place as a Summer resort. Until this season its hotel accommodations with public demand had been provided. Several houses were here, but the [illegible] guests. It is gradually, and not without reason, that this beautiful lake, only two hours from Saratoga by rail, and six miles by coach, is destined to rival that famous spa in populousness, in local charm, and even in a certain quality of its water, whose possessing none of the chemical ingredients that infallibly cure the "thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to," at any one of the minutest springs throughout the country, is still so peculiarly pure, so like to find oil in its softness, that it is an ever-recurring delight to use it for laving purposes. Indeed, it is said that the most obstinate complexion, whose irritation is merely external, will yield to its mollifying power, becoming smooth, if not "rosy," "death a lily of lawn." But an individual appropriation of the water is of less moment to the general observer than its concrete form, on whose levels beam the fairest of sails and painted or parti-colored row-boats plying over responsive to its gelatinous motion.

The lake sweeps gracefully around a isle of land upon which the "Leland House" is built, and with its margin of broken red sandstone hills, and northern vista of clustered mountains, among which Mt. Marcy is conspicuous, presents a constantly varying picture—a picture of which the eye never wearies, and which is enjoyed almost equally as upon the lake from the piazza or windows of the hotel. Three facades of the house open upon these hills and mountains, which are emerald, topaz, amethyst, ruby, according to the movement of the sun and his management of the clouds, as he lifts himself over Blueheard Mountain in the east, showering the lake with diamonds, or rides steadily in the zenith, or stoops in slow and stately way behind his western panoply of variegated curtain, making Blueheard, in yesterday's light, earnings with delight by a parting kiss. A sunset here is really something of rare and obnoxious beauty, and nowhere, it is said, are painted more perfect rainbows on water, hill and sky. I have seen but one, or rather one with an attendant radiant reflection, yet that one has made me a willing disciple to the seeming boastfulness of the assertion, linking, as it did, with sederous span the north-eastern and south-western mountain ranges, the white crest-base of the springing arch dipped into the transparent lake to rest within its bed. Imagination needed but the slightest impulse to complete the magic circle, and reproduce on a magnified scale the unique effect of the circular rainbow found only, I believe, within the Staubach and Niagara's central fall.

When we consider that this beautiful spot, so near our great Metropolis, was five years ago a terra incognita except to the people of the villages and the adjacent country, and an occasional traveler, huntsman or fisherman, who put up at the one tavern of Schroon—a little wayside inn on the State road between Albany and Montreal—and, moreover, that this beautiful lake is but the opening story to a vast region of yet undeveloped magnificence in the wilderness of the Adirondacks, we feel how illimitable are the resources of even our near country of New-York State; how unnecessary is it to go beyond a day's journey from home to find the dendrotum in scenery, of beauty and grandeur, with healthfulness of locality.

That in half a decade a place should be so redeemed from wilderness, by the magical touch of enterprise, is a marvel; but not so marvellous as that we should toil year after year by tiresome journey, to penetrate into the heart of the hills of New-Hampshire, and leave unnoticed and uncared for equal attractions of our clover of kin. But the time is past for this family neglect. The Adirondack Railroad Company, in their aim to reduce by a hundred miles the distance between New-York and Montreal, have thrown wide the door of easy access to Schroon, and this Summer fashion trends upon the heels of liberty and fills the large drawing-room of the principal hotel, each evening, with trailing dresses, that overshadow the more sensible boating costumes of previous seasons. Occasionally a Dolly Varden has dared to show its dappled design in the large dining-hall, only to be looked at with glances askance by the worldly wise, who are sensitive of contact with this defunct spirit of the demi-monde. This ghost of a Dickens' pet can queen it now no more in halls of State, but must be content to flare her incongruous colors and pert insults to good taste in shop or kitchen, or on some "unknown and silent shore;" not, at least, on the shores of Schroon, which is fast growing garrulous in the approved gossip of great resorts.

But I babble like the belles here of extrinsic things, omitting the quiet charm of the place, and one great, if not predominant, secret of its growth. In front of the Leland House, a little to the left, is an island of some hundred, more or less, acres of diversified hill and rock and meadow-land, offering every variation of delight to the lover of the picturesque. Some thirty years ago it was purchased and put under cultivation, at large expense, by one Col. Ireland, a wealthy bachelor of New-York, who lived there in refined seclusion, gratifying an æsthetic taste by beautifying the lavish wilderness with devices of art, yet making art ever subservient to the master force of nature. Subsequently the island was sold to Hon. Bayard Clarke, a member of Congress under the old regime, who still further enriched this emerald gem by arabesque fancies, enlarging the house, which is modeled after an Italian villa, and finishing up to a poet's dream, the miles of woodland drives and many rambles leading to hidden covers, to overhanging rock, to crowning observatory, or open glade, with a fine, secluded mood, desiring sympathy therewith, to where breeze-laden waves and murmuring pine-tops mingle their swelling voices in mimicry of ocean, while just beyond, shielded by intervening rock, the quiet of more tropical vales returns soothingly supreme. Thus is on the South end of the island, where the Eastern and Western of granite hold the western and northern winds at bay, is a splendid vineyard expanse, while for a long distance on the eastern line are growing fields and garden, separated from the house by a beautiful park for deer. But I cannot enumerate the natural resources of a "land of rest and health" in a letter, between vistas of ing-tipped mountains and lulled to repose, away from a work-a-day world, by the ceaseless lapping of tuneful water—waters that forever sing madrigals to the embracing hills, in the centre of which this little queen of a silver sea, did regal on her throne, sitting in state, and waiting to the assembled visitor from the various hotels.

The family who own the island, and who enjoyed it for eight successive Summers, entertaining (so say the village archives) their city friends in a princely way, are now in Europe, and we understand (also) that the inconvenience of such a retreat from the city is the cause of their offer for sale. If I were only rich enough to buy it! Ah! beautiful dream of a poet, you are not for me; rather for some more favored of fortune! Wish for I touch your shores, with regret I cease to speak of you, so excellent beyond my limited fancy; so fair in reality and so [illegible] in memory before me! But the steamer has come which steams daily up this lovely lake with tourists, and we must look to the arrivals; yet as a final picture I would mention that during the sixteen miles of the little steamer's approach, to its greeted by an uninterrupted view of the Leland House, with its impending front and lofty piazza, and by the glorious tri-color of our nation "frenetic to be free" waving from the cupola, in brilliant and imbodying red, a tireless welcome to this entrance of the Adirondacks. The Management of the House of Refuge on Randall's Island.

The Board of State Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction met yesterday, at the House of Refuge, Randall's Island, to investigate the charges of cruelty and mismanagement recently made in the public Press with reference to that institution and its administration. The Board commenced its investigation by taking up the first specification, "that the said managers neglect to furnish the inmates of the House of Refuge with good, wholesome food in sufficient quantities for their proper sustenance." In reply, the managers produced the following scale of dietary, with which the inmates are fed, and the testimony of the steward who supplies the food, the cook, the baker, and the officials who preside at the table during meals: Breakfast, stewed meat (beef), [illegible] twice a week, and vegetables; one [illegible] of meat and molasses twice a week and bread [illegible] five times a week. This dietary was varied slightly, according to the season and at the discretion of the medical attendant. The physician in charge gave evidence in relation to the healthy condition of the inmates, and the boy Robinson, whom it was alleged was grossly ill-treated, was examined and denied that he was overworked or that he was improperly dealt with. The Board then adjourned to this morning.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Hon. Jas. P. Holcombe, of Virginia, and Gen. N. Bangsdorf.

From a Correspondent in Virginia.

Hard upon the announcement in your paper that the latter of these Confederate diplomats was the guest of Horace Greeley and an occupant with him of his pew in church, near the great city which he conspired to burn, followed a letter from the former to the editor of the Lynchburg Republican, calling at a flimsy pretext to bring himself before an abused public, and propitiate public favor by the forwardness of his zeal for Mr. Greeley. It is a little singular that these noted secesh-ists should at such a distance from each other, and with such unusual comfort, embrace the earliest occasion to signalize their zeal for the Liberal solicitude. Perhaps the following paragraph from the same number of the Richmond Dispatch that copied the letter of our Virginia Confederate serves to "point the moral and adorn the tale" of the simultaneous thankfulness of the credulous farmer of Chappaqua. "The letter of Jacob Thompson to G. P. Benjamin, Secretary of State of the Southern Confederacy, found among the Confederate archives, which have recently been sold to this Government, shows that Thompson was the regularly-authorized agent of the Confederacy, both for the purpose of procuring the burning of New-York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Cincinnati, and for organizing a counter revolution at the North. For these purposes Thompson and his associates—Clay, Holcombe and Sanders—were supplied with $1,000,000 in gold; and in furtherance of their scheme they were in communication with residents of the North, and met some of them personally at Niagara." Nothing is to be hoped or made of the silent and inflexible Grant; but it may pay to bedaver the facile and good-natured Greeley with the froth of their overflowing and venal adulation at a time when his heart yearns toward his ardent neophytes, whose venal motives he does not discern. It is not strange that Mr. Holcombe is burning with "an extraordinary and almost affectionate ardor for Mr. Greeley." He may make something of him in the future. He would have the future President, if he no chance to be, forces that his burning propensities ever went out of himself toward the great cities of the North and West. Little did he think when he penned this adulatory letter that the long-suppressed evidence of his disorderly mission was soon to see the light, and brand him with its infamy. It now seems it was his business to hatch at the North a barbarous conspiracy to burn cities and select treasons among his associates not yet more of hateful notoriety. Does he praise in his letter about "the civilities of war," and complain of Mr. Lincoln's shutting the door against these and other "means of pacification that would have followed and infused into the conduct of hostilities a more humane and Christian spirit?" In his light of Christian civilization, is the maxim to be correctly stated in this paragraph, that is verily "Satan rebuking sin." But now that Mr. Holcombe is in the vein to write of his mission to Canada, will he not deign to tell us what, if any, connection he had with the cognate enterprise of introducing infectious diseases in the great centres of Northern population? Was it were the confederate of the North whom he met and conspired with at Niagara; and above all, what became of the million dollars of gold which he and his associates were to dispense to instigate treason, inhumanity and crime. When he has made a clean breast of all this foul stuff, we of Virginia can best tell what weight is to be given to the supercilious indictment of Mr. Greeley. I seem to hear Mr. Greeley exclaim with genuine disgust "Non tale auxilio, nec defensoribus!" He smiles at Mr. Greeley's credulity in supposing that these southern emissaries were on a mission of peace, and exults in the declaration that "the word go out in our land had given countenance to this widely-prevalent delusion." Not indeed, their task was to foment uncivilized and savage warfare by having detested traitors to redness to ashes the most populous cities of the North, reckless of the inhuman massacre of women and children and non-combatants. It was far from suspecting that honest Horace Greeley would knowingly consort with these "hostis humani generis," but what a commentary does this spectacle

THE REPUBLIC FRANCE TWO OR THREE YEARS HENCE.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

PARIS, Wednesday, July 17, 1872.

Apparently the Republic has gained largely by the recent declaration of M. Thiers, and it will have gained in fact, provided the opposition fail to arrive as a common understanding. Weather may will or not depends upon events, and I should not like to predict one way or the other from present data. It is evident from many circumstances that the members of the Bilbao are more compromising than they have been hitherto, and more disposed to throw aside political predilections in view of what is regarded as a great danger to the country. Subsequent events have made the President's words more impolitic and imprudent, for he has turned all of the deserted men of the Right into more enemies, who only wait a favorable opportunity to strike a fearful blow. The Radicals are very hopeful that "Bede" cry victory and M. Gambetta did not hesitate to tell a party of revolutionists at La Ferte-sous-Jouarre that they had only to wait with moderation and patience in order to succeed at the Government. Indeed, the course of M. Thiers has cleared the way for them. He has so changed the Government that they feel a Republican is chosen at each election, but that Republican is always a "Red" of the deepest dye. Unless the majority do take matters into their own hands after the loss, what will be the result? The Radicals, aided by M. Thiers, will carry every election, or very nearly, and, when once the majority that party will proceed to carry out its known notes. It will remind of M. Thiers as others did put Gambetta in his place. All this was more than hinted at in Gambetta's speech, the key-note of which was, "Patience, brothers, the old man is doing our work better than we could do it ourselves. Moderate your desires for a little longer, and victory is ours. The day of revenge is at hand." The majority know very well that they have to meet this question at once, and unless they do meet it, and meet it promptly, they will have no claim to our sympathy in case of future misfortunes.

I cannot say it with certainty, but from various little items it seems to me that M. Thiers was about to play another cruel trick upon the long suffering majority. The other day he declared that he must explain before the Assembly separated for its vacation; the Right promised to endure his provocation in silence provided he would defer his explanation until after the loan was subscribed. In a little over a month, I think, the Assembly will separate. Well, despite the appeals of Mr. Rothschild and others interested, M. Thiers is trying to defer the issue of the loan until that time, although it could be put out in a week without difficulty, and even, the great bankers says, with increased profit. Subsequent orders from Spain, Italy, England and Holland have given the certainty that about seven milliards, a little over it may be, will be subscribed at once.

Now you will be able to understand the trick which I believe the President intends to play if he can possibly delay the loan. By an arrangement with Gambetta he will promise the Left to propounce still more strongly in favor of the Republic, advocating a resolution on the Assembly on the ground that it is monarchical while the country is republican—provided they will give him his cherished protection. Today M. Gambetta's paper says that the Left, even the red-trade portion, will vote for the far proposed by M. Thiers, believing that it will have a tendency to destroy the schemes of the Monarchists, and make the Republic invulnerable, if he will has worked well. The evening before the loan M. Thiers makes his declaration; seven milliards or more are subscribed; and on the eve of the vacation the President gives this as a proof of public confidence in him, and moves for a dissolution of the Assembly. This is speculation, it is true, but see how far on the road we are already! The bankers are crying for the loan; M. Rothschild fears it may not be delayed longer than the 25th; the Right are using all their influence to get it out, and M. Thiers refuses. Meantime he is counting heads, and the coming vote on the Tax bill, which you will have by telegraph before my letter arrives, will show you whether or not his plan will succeed. M. Gambetta has pledged the Left to the bill; M. Thiers is to speak in a day or two upon it, and M. Rouher has notified his intention of replying. But the Left will not permit him to speak. He will be hooted down at once. Yes he is going to make one more effort to save the country from this—to keep the Government from putting burdens upon industry too great for it to bear—to make one more effort to save the treaties of commerce with England and other States. I sympathize with him most heartily, but know he will not be heard. Only last night a Deputy informed me that it was useless for him to try, for the thing had been decided in caucus, and this interval was the publisher's hands, when new difficulties arose. After the Commune it was proposed to go on with the work, but a new obstacle was in the way—M. Thiers had arrived at power. Of all the men of whom the Prince speaks M. Thiers—or "little Thiers," as Talleyrand calls him—is the most accurately handled. Everything about him is handled with a pen of tongs, as the reward for the remark of the Duchess de Berry was inscribed to Simon Deutz, the barrister. He is accused of having stolen four millions, of having robbed the Comte de Blacas by making him responsible for the debts of Charles X., of having caused the fall of that Monarch, of arranging to make the Duc d'Orleans King, of having robbed the Monarchy and caused the fall of Louis Philippe, by his pre-arranged obstinacy in a Kingly policy, and the Prince goes on to give him a lower endorsement, which has come of a Niagara family which had lost many of its members by sudden accidents. In fact, the Prince says that not even a cure in which the people who flattered their chosen to triumph, and, unfortunately, against their wishes, were unfortunately arranged in the process of the travel. It was entirely due to the Prince that that from Paris was never sent to the hands out of the treasury as one of the pockets of his royal master. This is a specimen of Talleyrand's malice, and it must be confessed that his wit carries him a long way. And it has been from his lodge time beyond the bounds of mere literary or political reason.

I do not know the origin of the quarrel between the two men, but their hatreds were intense. M. Thiers is candid enough upon the Prince. Talleyrand was doubtless the author at the first restoration, and he had much to do with the second. Thiers helped to push over Charles X., and promptly aided Louis Philippe in taking his seat. While yet uncertain whether or not he would be immediately kicked out, Thiers clapped the crown upon his head, and stood before him with his sandy under his coattails, smiling at the baffled politicians, looking for all the world like the pictures of Mr. Punch patronizing burly John Bull and standing between him and the English people. This established an antagonism between them, but there was a personal matter. When M. Thiers wrote history, he had to treat of the Congress of Vienna, where Talleyrand represented France. Mr. Hunt, Baker and Talon differ as to the ability there displayed. The former says he acted well and with great sarcasm and cleverness; Thiers says that it was a great and stupid blunder to turn at once to Blacas and Austria, without waiting for Russia and Russia to come to him. Sir Henry says he was drunk in one of the questions by the jokes and sneering the parties engaged. Thiers has of ways been against England, and hence Blacas Talleyrand for leaning towards her. It would be curious to hear M. Thiers opinion today, upon this question, and to know whether he not blames Talleyrand for trying to provide against the antagonism he foresaw between Germany and France by a Bourbon restoration in England and Austria. At any rate there is the quarrel. Both of these illustrious statesmen threw mud at each other; but the Prince is dead, and M. Thiers hold the reins of power. Hence you will understand why the Memoirs of Prince Talleyrand failed to get the requisite authorization to appear. Gen. Sherman tells me they were busy since his arrival, and to-night, for the first time, is to meet a party of Americans. Messrs. Bowles Bros., bankers, give him a reception this evening for the purpose of presenting to him the leading Americans in Paris. ASHBY.

NAVARRO'S WATER-METER.

Application for a Mandamus to Compel Payment of $263,500 by the City Denied.

Judge Barrett has rendered a decision in the case of The People ex rel. José F. Navarro vs. George M. Van Nort, Commissioner of Public Works, denying the relator's application for a mandamus to compel the Commissioner to make requisition on Controller Green to pay $263,500, with interest from Sept. 17, 1871, claimed to be a balance due for water meters, delivered to the City, pursuant to contract. In his opinion rendered in the case, after overruling several objections taken in opposition to the motion, to the effect that the authority conferred on the Commissioner was not contained in the title of the act, and that more than one subject was enumerated in the title of the subsequent act relating to the same subject, Judge Barrett goes on to say: Lastly, it is claimed that the contract was a violation of section 104 of the charter, which substantially provides that contracts made by the heads of Departments shall be founded on sealed proposals made in compliance with public notice duly advertised. The relator concedes that no bids or proposals were invited; that the terms of the contract were not advertised; that the contract, and that there gave no security for its faithful performance. He claims that these provisions of the charter have no application to a patented article like his, and that, at all events, the acts above referred to were as absolute dispensers to the Commissioner of Public Works. The Court is of opinion that the discretion thus conferred, was not intended to override these provisions of the charter, but that it was limited to the introduction of the system and the designation of the pattern of the water meter. There is nothing in the act directly repealing or suspending pro tanto the provisions of the charter. Such an implication is not favored, and here there is much to justify the opposite inference. For it must be considered that, even upon the strictest interpretation, a great power was conferred upon the Commissioner. As his will a water-meter could be placed in every store, warehouse, factory, stable, or other place of business in the City, and the entire expense thereof charged as a lien upon the property. It is not fair to conclude that the Legislature intended to impose upon the owners of property, whatever sum the Commissioner might choose to pay for the article thus thrust upon them. It is more reasonable to suppose that the property-owners, upon whom this expense was to be cast, should not be deprived of whatever protection was afforded to them by the existing provisions of law, and by those wholesome checks upon extravagant expenditure which it was deemed wise to engraft upon our charter. These considerations are not affected by the fact that this was a patented article. The relator enjoyed no monopoly of water-meters. It is a matter of fact, complete or incomplete, "for his was chosen from among forty-eight different styles. The case is not, therefore, parallel with those cited by the learned counsel for the relator. Nor would the application of section 104 of the charter work the disastrous results contended for, namely, of obliging the Commissioner to use any method or article, however inferior in quality and utility. The act expressly provides for such contingency, for while the Commissioner cannot arbitrarily choose the particular article, he can designate the general pattern which alone he will approve of, that is, the form, style, dimensions, materials to be used in the construction, which must be retained. He is also plainly authorized to reject any meter which, to quote the language of the act, "is not suitable for the purpose."

This last objection is, therefore, well taken, and the application for a mandamus must be denied.

THE PAVING CONTRACTS.

Investigation of Several Claims Before the Commissioners Yesterday.

The Contract Commissioners met again yesterday afternoon. The examination of Terence O'Brien, for the building of a hundred foot sewer in Hudson-street, between Bank and West Twelfth-streets, was the first business taken up. Superintendent Lord testified that the work was properly executed, and in accordance with the specification. The case was then closed, but the Commissioners have not yet rendered a decision. Two claims, one presented by Mr. Hoey, and the other by Joseph Pickard, were called, but adjourned until today in motion of claimants' counsel. The next case on the calendar was that of Patrick Farley. The contract required the laying of a thirteen-inch sewer-pipe in Madison-avenue, between Seventy-fourth and Eighty-sixth streets. The contract was sold by Farley, to whom it was originally awarded. A contractor named Florence Driscoll purchased the job for $200. Driscoll certified that the work was performed in accordance with the specifications, and under the eyes of the inspector appointed by the engineer. Driscoll further stated that there were six persons employed for an hour with blocks, and that as he was obliged to pay them, or was charged with their salaries, the contract did not pay. The witness knew nothing of the original awarding of the contract, nor if there was any fraud connected therewith. The Commissioners adjourned the further hearing of the case until today, when Farley will attend.

Three of the cases on the calendar were claims brought by Charles H. Green, President of the Hamar Wood-paving Company. One of these claims was for the paving with the Hamar wood paving of Forty-sixth-street, between Fourth and Sixth avenues. Mr. Green, City Surveyor Purdy sent in a long report on this claim. He asserted that the claim was unjust and fraudulent and charged that the specifications for the work had been fraudulently drawn, so that the City was swindled; that the contractors cost of thousands of dollars. As, Mr. Francis was his present and counsel for the claimant, the case was taken up, and the case was adjourned until today. The claim of Terence Moore, for the regulating, &c., of Madison-avenue from Eighty-sixth-street to Eighty-ninth-street, was next taken up. Mr. Moore commenced work before his contract was of whom was Justice Coulter, were approved by the Controller. The work was satisfactorily performed, but Mr. Strahan claimed that as the Controller did not approve of the surveys there was no contract. The case will be decided on Friday. In the case of J. D. Moore, whose claim was presented by Mr. Strahan to be invalid and fraudulent, because the claimant was a City officer at the time of the making of the contract, it was decided that the position held by Moore—Superintendent of the cleaning of Marginal ways, not a position appertaining to the holder the dignity of a Corporation or City officer. The case, however, will come up again for hearing on Thursday. The property-holders on the line of the work through their counsel, asked this adjournment, to enable them to prove, as they contend they can, that the work was not performed according to the specifications.

After the hearing of some other claims, of which no final disposal was made, the meeting adjourned until 4½ o'clock this afternoon.

Controller's Payments.

Controller Green has paid the wages of the big pipe men up July 15, $80,000; laborers in street repairs to July 15, $9,000; small pipe men to July 15, $[illegible]

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

[illegible]

SALES BEFORE THE CALL—12½ P. M.

[illegible]

SECOND BOARD—1½ P. M.

[illegible]

TUESDAY, July 30—P. M.

The subscriptions to the French Loan, though not yet known here with accuracy, are very large, and have already imparted a healthier tone to British and American securities. It has been expected, for some time past, that any great competition for the new French Five ⅌ cents would call capital together in a way to benefit our Bonds; and this afternoon's prices from London show already an advance of a quarter ⅌ cent. in Five-Twenties, Ten-Forties, and the Funded Fives, besides an improvement of an eighth on Consols. The crisis of the stock market on this account may be over, and a natural result would be a better business in United States Bonds. Our Exchange market, which was a shade firmer this morning, though without quotable change, was weaker again in the afternoon. The quotations for prime sixty-day sterling has been 109½@109¾, with sales chiefly at 109¾; and short sight may be quoted 110¼@110½.

Gold, however, did not respond to this improved condition of Bonds abroad. From 114⅞@114¾, the opening quotation, it passed to 114⅝@114⅞; 114¾ was bid to the close of business. The highest sales were at 114⅞@15-16, and it was still offered at this fraction. The leading rate was much as usual, 1½ to 2 ⅌ cent. interest for carrying. It is stated that $500,000 Gold Coin is engaged for shipment to-morrow, but it has the air of being forced, in view of the price at which demand bills can be bought. Silver is reported going forward to the extent of $280,000.

The Public Funds are an eighth to a quarter better than yesterday, with sales of Sixes of 1881 at 117¼, New 1868s at 115, and 1867s at 115½. The Ten-Forties are an eighth better, and New Five ⅌ cents steady.

Stocks have been dull, and a trifle lower. Sales on seller's option have been made in nearly all the speculative Stocks, the concession being three-eighths to a half ⅌ cent. for an option of sixty days. The cases of advance are few; Panama rose from 120 to 123@123½, Michigan Central from 116½ to 117, and that is about all. The speculative Stocks ranged as follows for sales in the "regular way": Erie, 52⅝@51⅞; Pacific Mail, 36⅞@34¾; North-Western, 76½@74¾; St. Paul, 87½@84¾; Ohio, 46½@45; Western Union Telegraph, 75⅝@74¾; New-York Central, 98½@97¾; Lake Shore, 92½@91¾; Union Pacific, 37½@38; C., C., C. & I. C., 37½@36¾; and Rock Island, 112½@112¾. It is an average of about a quarter ⅌ cent. decline for the day. Money showed no further signs of activity, but became as easy as at any time recently, and closed 2 to 3 ⅌ cent. on call. Stocks generally commanded money at 3 ⅌ cent., where lent for use; and Erie, with a rather better supply for delivery, was not worth a bonus, though it lent free of interest.

The State Bond list was dull. Virginia Consols improved about a half, and South Carolina New (of Jan. and July) declined as much. The Central Pacific Gold Bonds were dull, at 102@103; Union Pacific sold down to 89¾, but recovered to 89¾, closing easy.

After the Second Board of the Exchange, the following quotations were made, as against the last figures of Monday afternoon:

CLOSING QUOTATIONS—JULY 30.

	Monday.	Tuesday.
United States New 5s	113¾	113¾
U. S. 5-20s, '65, May and Nov.	116¼	116¼
U. S. 5-20s, '67, Jan. and July	115¾	115¾
American Gold	114⅞	114⅞
Bills on London, 60 days	109½	109¾
N. Y. Central and Hudson	98⅞	98⅞
Chicago and Rock Island	112¾	112¾
North-western Common	75½	75¾
Pacific Mail	76⅞	76⅞
St. Paul Preferred	79½	79½
St. Paul Common	57⅞	57⅞

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

Are being absorbed by an increasing demand for them.

Besides being the obligation of a wealthy corporation, composed of men of experience and high-toned commercial integrity, they are secured by a first mortgage on the road, revenues, land grant, franchise and equipments, combined in one mortgage, and are readily negotiable both in the markets of this country and Europe.

A liberal sinking fund provided in the mortgage deed must advance the price upon the closing of the loan. Principal and interest payable in GOLD. Interest at eight (8 p. c.) per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, free of tax. Principal in thirty years. Denominations, $1,000, $500 and $100, Coupon or Registered.

Price 97½ and accrued interest in currency from Feb. 15, 1872.

Maps, circulars, documents and information furnished.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New-York.

The diminished quantity of these Bonds for sale, and the increased demand absorbing them, warrant the belief that they will soon be sought for at an advance considerably above the present subscription price at which they can now be had through the principal banks and bankers throughout the country, and from the undersigned, who unhesitatingly recommend them.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST A JUDGMENT DEBTOR FOR CONTEMPT.

George M. Hosmer vs. Norman Ward.—In this case an order for supplementary examination was served on the defendant, who failed to appear. Upon an order on supplementary, Judge Smith, in Chambers, the latter made an order fixing the defendant the full amount of the judgment, $150, for contempt, and ordering that he should committed until defendant's counsel then obtained from Judge Pratt an order to vacate or modify the order of Judge Smith should not be granted, on the ground that it was made by default. This motion was argued today by counsel for plaintiff, who moved the order of Judge Smith, recitals that it had been made after argument. Judge Pratt thereupon denied the motion, but directed a stay of proceedings until the attachment should issue. Counsel then obtained from Judge Pratt to Judge Smith for leave to renew the present motion, which is denied absolutely, with no costs to plaintiff, in case such permission is granted.

For plaintiff, Lyman; for defendant, Gunther.

THE EMIGRATION COMMISSION.

The German Emigrants—A Complaint by the Staats Zeitung—The Catholic Protectory.

The Commissioners of Emigration met yesterday, Mr. O'Gorman presiding. Mr. Lynch read a translation of a long article from the Staats Zeitung of July 29, in which it is charged that for the first six months of the present year the majority of the emigrant arrivals at Castle Garden were of German-speaking people, and it is argued the necessity, therefore, of so arranging the appointment of employes of the Board that a large number of them should speak German. The article alleged that, at Castle Garden, of ninety-two officials only twenty-six speak German; that, at Ward's Island, of 103 officials only thirty-eight speak German; and that of the emigrants' boarding-house keepers forty-three are Irish, English and Scotch, three are French, one Italian, one Danish, but only twenty-nine were Germans. The article concludes by asserting that of the two physicians at Castle Garden, one should be able to speak German. This had been the case until recently, but now neither were able to speak German, a young Irishman named Healy having been appointed on the resignation of Dr. Hallock, one of the former incumbents, a Dr. Elsner, proposed in Mr. Wallack, having been rejected.

Mr. Lynch said it would appear from this article that German is the prevailing language in this County, and that great injustice has been done to a majority of our citizens. He proceeded to show that some of the allegations in the article were incorrect. By official figures it appears that up to June 30, 1872, the arrivals from English-speaking countries (Ireland, England, Scotland, &c.) were 66,001, while the number coming from Germany, &c., was 64,482. He also said that while the 43 Ward's boarding-house keepers can accommodate 1,200 persons, the 29 German boarding-houses can accommodate 1,000. As for the Castle Garden physicians, Dr. Healy, Mr. Lynch said he could speak German, and that the appointment was made after the medical society had been so informed, and that an application from Germans had been received. Mr. Lynch moved for a committee to investigate the origin and correctness of the charges.

Mayor Hall was opposed to noticing the attack at all, as was also Mr. Kauffman, but all the others voted in its favor, and the resolution was adopted. Messrs. Hirz, Kauffman and Lynch were chosen such committee.

Mr. Wallack then rose and stated that he would take the responsibility of the article.

A correspondence between the President of the Immigration Board and the President of the Catholic Protectory was read. Mr. O'Gorman, on the part of the Immigration Commissioners, offered the use of some unfurnished buildings on Ward's Island for the temporary accommodation of the homeless children, but this offer was declined with thanks, other arrangements having been made for the orphans.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.
New-York City.

The Weekly Times.

THE NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES will be published THIS MORNING, and may be had at the counter of the Publication Office, in wrappers, ready for mailing. Price 5 cents.

It contains, in a four-page supplement, making altogether twelve pages of reading matter, a full report of SENATOR CONKLING'S GREAT SPEECH at Cooper Institute; Biographical Sketch of President GRANT; THE TRUTH AT LAST, being the official report of the rebel agent Greeley went to Canada to visit; New Movements in Erie; the latest from NORTH CAROLINA and this State; GRACE GREENWOOD'S Letter from the Yosemite; a List of Greeley's Chief Supporters; Official Report of the Department of Agriculture; the very latest telegraphic and general news; editorials on matters of current interest; a page of carefully prepared commercial matter, giving the latest financial news and market reports; items of agriculture and domestic interest, and other interesting reading matter.

To Advertisers.

☞ For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 56 West 23d-st., junction of Broadway and 6th-av.; No. 308 West 23d-st., opposite Grand Opera-house, and No. 1,241 Broadway, between 30th and 31st sts., at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ The NEW-YORK TIMES has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 171 Fulton-st., junction of Fulton and Main, where advertisements will be received until 5 P. M.

☞ Throughout the Presidential canvass, we shall publish fuller reports of meetings and conventions in each State than any other New-York journal. Very full dispatches will be forwarded by telegraph, supplemented by careful letters. Our desire is to place before the public the latest and most trustworthy information, and we have made ample arrangements for that purpose.

The Evening Post replies very properly to the subterfuge put forward by Mr. GREELEY's successors in relation to the course of the Tribune for years past on public questions. The cue in the Tribune office now is to deny that Mr. GREELEY is responsible for what has appeared in the Tribune, and to throw the blame on individual contributors. This is something new in journalism, but as it comes from FENTON's Professor it must doubtless become the rule for the future. In the same Fentonian spirit, the Professor tries to make our remarks about GREELEY's letter to the loyal Governors concerning President LINCOLN, apply to others who signed the same letter. It says we have called the letter "treasonable." Of course we never said anything of the kind. What we have said is that Mr. GREELEY, in signing the letter, was guilty of an act of base treachery, but THEODORE TILTON, who also signed the letter, cannot be accused of the same bad faith. Mr. GREELEY's position and relations toward Mr. LINCOLN convict him of bad faith—the circumstances were different in regard to the others who signed it. Mr. GREELEY's successors make poor work of defending him. They had better let him alone. If the lion is in a cage, do not let us see too much of the donkey strutting about in a lion's skin.

FENTON's disciple cannot make up his mind to give up the theory that the TIMES has been one of Judge BARNARD's supporters. The foolish person had better go and ask Judge BARNARD his opinion of the matter! He might also read the report published in the Tribune of the 27th inst.:

"Andrew Jonas was called and sworn: Was a Law Ono's reporter and lawyer; knew Judge BARNARD by sight very well; have reported in his Court since 1866 nearly every day. * * * Witness, referring to the assault upon Mr. EATON, said Judge BARNARD, while on the Bench, said, 'My enemies are unfortunate, one has dropped dead, and the other has succeeded in getting himself hit on the head, and was hit a little too hard;' it was generally reported that EATON was hit on the head with sand-bags; EATON appeared in the case of RAMSEY against JAY GOULD and others; it was some little time after the proceeding before Judge BARNARD, when the assault occurred, EATON was counsel against GOULD; witness knew H. J. RAYMOND, editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES; he died unexpectedly; the TIMES had been very hostile to BARNARD and the Erie management."

This sort of evidence does not bear out the Professor's lumpish recollections of what the TIMES has said of BARNARD. But as he has not the least idea of what has appeared in the Tribune, and denounces every fresh extract from its columns as a "forgery," how can he be expected to know what other journals have said or done? Let him keep on ruining HORACE GREELEY, for the sake of stepping into his shoes. That is work enough for the great Professor.

Mr. SUMNER has spoken at last. He has told some of his colored correspondents to vote for GREELEY, and supplied them with his reasons, occupying some three columns. We have no hesitation in saying that his arguments are many of them fallacious, and some of them utterly unworthy Mr. SUMNER's reputation for candor. Is it quite decent to contrast GREELEY's early poverty with the "patronage" GRANT received in being sent to West Point, or to say that GREELEY was trained as a civilian and GRANT as a soldier, in a way to imply that GRANT's four years at West Point unfitted him for civil life? And did not the country get full value for the education of Gen. GRANT "at public expense?" Is it quite decent to say that greater "industry" on the President's part would have prevented Kukluxism? Or that differing with Mr. SUMNER on the San Domingo business disqualified him for dealing with law-breakers? But we need not stop to specify absurdities—or worse—in Mr. SUMNER's letter. It cannot influence many intelligent colored men, for the simple reason that it omits entirely to answer the one question it sets out to answer, viz.: Will GREELEY or GRANT "enforce the requirements of the Constitution and the laws respecting the civil and political rights of the negroes, with most heartfelt sympathy and the greatest vigor?" With the Kuklux in the Carolinas supporting GREELEY and the Kuklux in the Albany Penitentiary cursing GRANT, Mr. SUMNER did not dare to answer that question frankly.

The news from North Carolina amounts simply to this: All that fraud and intimidation can do will be attempted to carry the State for the Democrats. Those who have faith enough in the resolution and courage of the Republican voters still hope that the infamous programme which is being carried out under the direction of WOOD and BLUMENBERG will fall short of its expected result. That there will be intense excitement in the old North State on Thursday is very obvious, that there will be violence and bloodshed is all too probable. It is to be hoped that the country will carefully watch the development of the tactics by which it is being attempted to carry the State for the Democrats and for GREELEY. If we may judge of the frame of Hercules from his foot, the first installment in the campaign of rowdyism and fraud will help us to appreciate what the Greeley managers are preparing for the entire contest, and for what they hope is to follow after it.

A more complete and overwhelming refutation of a series of falsehoods has seldom been made than that which is made in our columns this morning of the Tribune's pretended exposure of "Defaulters Under GRANT." We invite the careful perusal of our statements. They are based on public records, and may be implicitly relied on. They show that in its anxiety to collect charges against the President, Mr. GREELEY's organ has, in some cases resorted to pure invention, in others to gross exaggeration; that it has charged him with offenses of officers appointed by other Presidents, and even of those who were dismissed before he arrived at the Presidency; that some of the "defaulters" were never in the service at all, and that in nearly half its cases the alleged offenders were the subordinates of the President's appointees, for whom he was in no wise responsible, and from whom it is impossible that the Treasury should suffer one cent of loss. We have already pointed out that many of the accused persons were now supporters of GREELEY, and that, by the admission of his organ, all were dealt with in a manner that, had Gov. HOFFMAN ever adopted it, would have deprived Mr. GREELEY long ago of the aid of CASSIUS M. CLAY, PETER B. SWEENY, or any others of the Tammany Ring. If there is any possibility of folly and wickedness which the Tribune has not exemplified in this remarkable and outrageous assault on the President, we are not now able to conceive of it.

The Revival of the Kuklux.

No sensible man, who has read the newspapers of the day, doubts that the Kuklux were a reality less than a year ago. They were an organization formed to prevent the negroes voting the Republican ticket, and to this end they burned, whipped, mutilated and murdered numberless victims. In support of this assertion we quote HORACE GREELEY'S speech, made in June, 1871, in which he said:

"I have been asked, are there any Kuklux down South? Yes, gentlemen, there are. * * I am moved with profound disgust when I think of these men covering themselves up with second-rate cotton, masking their faces, arming themselves to the teeth, and riding around to the cabins of poor, harmless negroes, dragging them from their beds, and whipping and maiming them till they are compelled to swear they will never again vote for Republican Relief."

After this, no man—especially no man now supporting GREELEY—will deny the existence of the Kuklux a year ago.

But, says the Democratic Press, "the Kuklux are entirely fabulous." Well, why is Gov. WALKER, down in North Carolina, apologizing for them, and "hoping to God" that they will continue their infernal work? Hear him, as reported in a Greeley paper:

"A party styling itself Republican has for several years controlled the Administration, and has dragged North Carolina down from the high position she once occupied among the free commonwealths of the world, until her hitherto untarnished name became a by-word and a disgrace. The outrages of the Radicals had been so great that the people were driven into taking the power into their own hands, and exercising the God-given right of self-protection. These outrages, combined with an inefficient Administration, gave rise to Kukluxism. He was not here to defend the Kuklux or violence of any kind; but he did not hesitate to say, as the Chief Magistrate of the grandest old State in the Union, that when the men whom they have placed in power fail so utterly to do their duty, he hoped to God the people would take the Government into their hands."

This is a palpable confession and a defiant approval of the existence of the Kuklux. But no one needed Walker's impudent admissions to believe in that. Within a fortnight two distinct cases of Kukluxism have been announced in North Carolina. Doubtless more have occurred. Both the parties have motives for suppressing reports of them—the Democrats because they are afraid Northern Liberals will be disgusted, and Republicans because they fear that the alarm of the negroes at the renewal of persecution will keep voters from the polls. But the truth escapes. Here is what one of the Tribune's own correspondents was compelled to listen to, and is imprudent enough to report:

"The Democrats of the South, if HORACE GREELEY is elected, will be the worst disappointed set of men you ever saw. I don't believe Mr. GREELEY has sold out to them as they think he has, and there's sure to be a fight unless these accommodists down here are allowed to manage him. You don't and can't know them as we do; but mind what I tell you, this whole country will be overrun with Kuklux within three months after Mr. Greeley's inauguration. Then if he undertakes to suppress disorder there'll be such a howl as this country never heard."

Some of the Democratic papers take another tack. They would have us believe that the negroes are all at fault, though it is curious how this offensive people always get the worst of it. A dispatch to the Associated Press, which is usually unfair enough, thus describes an occurrence in Savannah:

SAVANNAH, July 29.—The attempt of the negroes to ride on street-cars culminated in a quarrel, to-night, during which two whites and several negroes were wounded. There is much excitement.

Thus, obviously colored as it is, is not savage enough for the Tribune, which publishes a special account as follows:

SAVANNAH, July 29.—The political bitterness which has been rapidly intensifying during the past few weeks, culminated in a riot, this afternoon, in the streets, between blacks and whites, excited by Custom-House employes.

A few months ago, before the Tribune's guns had been spiked by the treachery of its chief, it would have denounced an outrage of this kind as it deserved. It would have asked if an attempt to ride in street-cars was a capital offense in Savannah, and it would have promptly stamped as a lie the statement about Custom-house employes. Now it employs the tone and tactics of the old pro-slavery, Kuklux Democratic papers. Does it suppose that all its readers are as lost to a sense of decency, or are as incapable of honest indignation against cruelty and outrage as itself?

Still another portion of the Democratic Press would have it, we suppose, that the Administration speakers have been stirring up strife. The Herald raves about "the seed sown by Secretary BOUTWELL and those who have united with him in the attempt to excite the passions and hatreds of the negroes of North Carolina against the whites," and closes with the following brutal threat and more brutal falsehood:

"It must be peace or war between the black and white citizens of the Southern States, and Boutwell and his friends are doing their best to make it war."

There is not, in anything Mr. BOUTWELL or any other Republican speaker has said, the shadow of foundation for this statement of the Herald's. Senator DOOLITTLE, in his opening of the campaign, warned negroes that if they did not divide their votes their liberties would be in danger, and WALKER, as we have seen, sustained the Kuklux outrages. But no Republican has followed these evil examples.

The simple truth slipped from the pen of a Tribune writer when he declared, yesterday:

"There is no part of the Union where intimidation is so easy as it is in North Carolina, or where a little money will buy so many votes."

This is the secret of all these twistings and turnings on the question of the treatment of the negroes. Whether the Kuklux are boldly declared to have been called into being by the measures adopted to suppress them, or whether the negroes are charged with violently getting themselves killed and beaten, or whether all violence is sturdily denied, or even when the Republicans are accused of getting up riots to kill off their own rioters—the object of the lying and squirming is always the same. It is to promote the interests of the Kuklux Democracy, and bring in the reign of peace and reconciliation by allowing the midnight assassins and disguised marauders to have it all their own way, with HORACE GREELEY to defend, excuse, or pardon them.

Since the above was written, word comes that Monday night a Grant ratification meeting, in Savannah, was surrounded and fired on by a gang of several hundred armed men, and many were wounded. This is "reconciliation" with a vengeance. Shall we not all vote for the peaceful candidate whose followers observe such profound good feeling thus early in the campaign?

What a Little Money Can Do.

The sixth of the series of TIMES' picnics was, in every way, a memorable occasion. Nine hundred little newsboys, between the ages of seven and fourteen, were treated to a day's enjoyment after their own heart. They had plenty of food, plenty of fresh air and unbounded freedom to swim and romp, without fear and without danger. It is not difficult to imagine the best with which these bright-eyed and sharp-witted little fellows entered into the varied enjoyments of the day. The public has a peculiar tendernessfor this class of three times and their departure was attended by something like an ovation all along the line of their route to the barge. The youngsters had all two pieces of shoulder, and those who wanted it had three; they had sandwiches without stint, and lemonade in abundance. Yet all the accessories to the day's enjoyment did not cost over fifty cents a head—a price which would not have paid for the chowder consumed, had it been purchased in the usual way. Of course, this result was partly due to the generosity of the purveyors and others who furnished things needful for the picnic. The services of the Governor's Island Band were kindly granted, without fee or reward; the barge and grove were furnished at half price, and so on. All this illustrates how contagious the spirit of a charity of this kind becomes. Every man who contributes a dollar, not only helps to incite others to imitate him, but is instrumental in procuring the free and cheerful gift of a hundred little services, which have a pecuniary, as well as a moral value.

What is true of individuals is true of communities. The example of New-York inclined Philadelphia to a similar attempt as well-doing, and now the Boston Advertiser announces that a committee of ladies and gentlemen is being formed in that city to provide picnics and out-door entertainments for poor and neglected children during the rest of the Summer.

Successful and beneficial as these picnics are proving, our readers must not forget the work of saving the lives of the little ones who languish in the neglected places of the City, in which our agents are actively engaged. Here, also, charity has begotten charity, and Christian munificence is met by a display of Christian zeal. The poor inhabitants of wretched tenements are not only animated by a better feeling toward those who stretch a helping hand to their sick children, but the very contemplation of such compassionate regard prompts them to a kindlier and more helpful feeling toward each other. The aggregate of the Children's Fund to date, is close upon fifteen thousand dollars. Though this sum is still very far from being exhausted, the benefits and blessings which it has already directly and indirectly produced are simply incalculable.

Return of the Gift-Jewelers.

The late Police Superintendent, John JOURDAN, celebrated his advent to office by ridding our public thoroughfares of the gang of barefaced swindlers known as "gift-jewelers." For years these scoundrels had preyed upon strangers by means of an envelope game, which seemed so fair as to induce the uninitiated to venture their money very freely upon the result. The allurements have oftentimes proved strong enough to make countrymen stake their watches, rings, pocket-knives, and even their spectacles, upon a last deal, having watched certain envelopes so closely that they would become certain of drawing the proper one. It is a trick of the envelope game to allow strangers to win trifling articles of jewelry in order to educate them into a taste for it, but as the intention is to defraud, in any event, the matter is entirely optional with the blear-eyed person who presides over the "case." Arrests were often effected, yet there was scarcely a single instance in which a conviction was procured. Superintendent JOURDAN knew this, and formed his plans accordingly.

Presently an order was issued to have a policeman constantly on duty in front of every gift-jewelry den in the City, for the purpose of warning all would-be victims not to enter. With "persecution" of such a character it would be impossible to do anything. This the rogues soon discovered, and they quickly resolved to store their traps, and wait patiently for a change. In the meantime, they were at liberty to engage in other schemes of a more remunerative nature. The notorious sawdust swindle was set in motion soon afterward, and gave a large return for a very small outlay. There was scarcely a town or village in the country that was not literally flooded with circulars. This was only one of the numerous devices they have tried for cheating the unwary. However, it is now pretty evident that none paid so well as the gift-jewelry and the envelopes, and to these our swindlers have again returned, doubtless under the impression that when the thieves of the American Club could afford to resume their orgies at Greenwich, there should be nothing to prevent them from appearing once more upon the sidewalks, and from beginning to "rope in" customers after the manner of the "good old time."

They are astute reasoners, these fellows, and naturally enough conclude that the alliance between Tammany and GREELEY makes all things possible. By way of a feeler they have been content, so far, to open one den, and this is placed at the corner of Ann-street and Park-row, immediately opposite the Herald building. The place was formerly occupied as a publication office by the defunct New-York Standard. Here they propose to make a stand, provided they are permitted to do so by Superintendent KELSO. Now, we have time and again referred to the miserable insufficiency of the Police force, but this circumstance must not be allowed to prevent the Jourdan plan of constant watching in front of their doors from being immediately put into operation. Superintendent KELSO owes it to himself that this is done, and we hope that he will begin the work at once, by detaining a faithful patrolman to the Ann-street den. It would be an everlasting disgrace to the City if this gift-jewelry swindle were to be permitted full swing again, and the sooner the rogues who expect to fatten upon it are made to understand that there is no chance for them, the better it will be for the public interests.

Vagrancy and Unemployment.

If honest Democrats can extract any comfort, or derive any stimulus in behalf of GREELEY, from the current utterances of Mr. D. W. VOORHEES, and those who talk like him, they are neither wise nor self-respecting men. Mr. VOORHEES, in point of fact, ought can assume conclusions of opinion to make, when self-justification has been so swift and so absolute! Nothing is easier here than to speak strictly by the card. Let intelligent readers consider what Mr. VOORHEES, that great and shining light of Democracy, is saying now, and what he said on the 8th of May at Terre Haute. Hear him:

"Sometimes a man is supported for a small office on purely personal grounds, simply because he is an amiable and worthy man, with good qualifications for the position. Such motives alone, however, never governed the choice of a President, who, to a vast extent, shapes the whole policy of the Government for weal or woe. There is nothing, however, in Mr. GREELEY's personal traits and peculiarities to commend him for the high position to which he aspires. On the contrary, a man personally more unfit to fill the office of Chief Magistrate of this mighty Government was never mentioned in connection with it; but when distinguished gentlemen are mentioned in connection with that lofty station, their principles determine the suffrages of an enlightened people more than anything else. Tried by this standard, HORACE GREELEY irresistibly repels every Democrat in the United States."

This is tolerably plain talk, and spoken as it was with the earnestness of deep conviction, ought surely to be accepted as the real opinions of Mr. VOORHEES, which self-respect should have taught him never to forego. He has told us in another part of the same speech what he thinks of a man of mature age changing, or pretending to change, his deliberate convictions for a selfish purpose, as witness the following—the "great question" referred to being that of Protection:

"It is claimed, however, in some quarters that he has changed his position on this great question; that he has agreed to leave it to the people. My answer to this is brief. A man of mature age changing the deliberate and intense convictions of his whole life for the sake of an office, whether high or low, is a miserable spectacle. If Mr. GREELEY has done so, it proves him to be dishonest and unworthy of confidence. If he is capable of doing violence to his conscience for the sake of the Presidency, he will betray the people if he is elected."

Mr. GREELEY's election is so far from being probable that it may be called almost impossible. Without Democratic votes, nay, even without substantially the whole Democratic vote, his election would be absolutely impossible. In the face of the above, and volumes more like it, from the ablest Democratic thinkers in the country, we shall be curious to see how many honest voters of that party will give Mr. GREELEY their support. All that can be said of those that do will be that they richly deserve all the foul things that, for thirty years, Mr. GREELEY has said of them, and that they equally merit the betrayal which Mr. VOORHEES has so forcibly predicted.

Traveling at Home and Abroad.

Before long, our birds of passage, who fled with the Summer across the ocean, will be returning to us telling wondrous tales of their adventuring abroad. Possibly, too, they may feel inclined to look down a little on their home-staying friends from those heights of moral superiority to which a European tour lifts one. Their notes may turn up in spite of themselves over the diminished grandeur of our pet monuments; they will find themselves unconsciously disparaging the familiar ways and things of home. Our shops will lose their splendor in remembering the shops of the Palais Royal; our finest stucco cathedrals will seem less impressive after St. Peter's and Westminster Abbey; even the bronze Lincoln in Union-square may suffer by comparison with the Moses of MICHAEL ANGELO. Yet, to the most captious of those traveled critics, Central Park, we may be sure, will hold its own with any of the famous old world pleasure grounds; and still more, when he comes to take his next domestic jaunt to Labrador or the Yosemite, he will probably admit that, all things considered, Americans travel more luxuriously than any other people in the world.

In many respects, to be sure, Europe has the advantage of us, notably in the matter of wayside meals. Why it is that from Maine to Texas, from Washington to San Francisco, it is impossible for the hungry railway traveler to procure a palatable meal, is one of the modern mysteries. If the food is good, it is sure to be villainously cooked; if the cooking is good, it is sure to be applied to viands which no sane man outside of America would dream of eating. Doughnuts and pie, and rye coffee scalding hot—who but an idiot would attempt to satisfy hunger with victuals like these? Yet this is the staple of the refection offered the famished wayfarer at the midway station between here and Albany, on the chief railroad, and within a few miles of the chief city, in the United States. Even in the midst of prairie abundance, with the most delicious game fairly begging to be shot all about, the passenger on the Pacific Road is fain to content himself with the humble refreshment of strong bacon and weak tea. When it comes to meal-time, our European traveler will be sure to sigh for those comfortable dinners he enjoyed on the line of many a Russian road, or those savory little basket lunches which he found at every station in France.

But apart from the question of eating, he will travel here with drawbacks and nonveniences of many kinds which he looked for in vain through Europe. His luggage, for example, is there a source of never-ending martyrdom and vexation of spirit. In the first place, he had to pay for its transportation at ruinous rates. Then he was constantly coming to some frontier—it seemed after a while, to his disordered imagination, as though Europe was all frontiers—where his luckless trunks had to go through the Custom-house, and he opened and tossed and tumbled about, and then re-embarked under fresh regulations. The whole journey was an uneasy nightmare, haunted by visions of lost baggage, and broken only by recurrent Custom-houses. And when the luggage was actually lost, as not infrequently happened, days and weeks of tribulation were sometimes necessary to find it.

But here, on the point of starting for a little excursion of three or four thousand miles, he sends for an expressman who comes to his house, takes his trunk, gives him a little brass ticket and he thinks of them no more till his journey's end. Then another expressman meets him in the cars, receives his little brass ticket, and proceeds, his baggage is waiting for him in his room at the hotel. And where can one find in Europe the comfort of our sleeping-cars or river steam-boats? Grant that the gilding and the velvet are a little obtrusive for a severe taste, the beds are none the less soft for that, and one must not be of too nice an eye on traveling. On the North River and Sound steamers, the traveler glides from point to point as though he were sleeping at home in his own chamber. And until balloons shall be tamed, that is surely the perfection of traveling.

MINOR TOPICS.

Few would have thought, a few years ago, of ever seeing China and Japan taking rank among the maritime Powers. This bids fair, however, to be the case, and that at no distant date. A Chinese steam-frigate was launched the other day which will compare fairly with an American or European vessel of the same class, and which has been built, machinery and all, in China; and the Government Minister of late there gives details of the present condition of the navy of Japan that promise still greater progress. The Japanese have several iron-clads—including the Stonewall Jackson, once of the Confederate navy—an immense dock in the Gulf of Yeddo, capable of receiving for repairs the largest steam-ships, and several extensive machine works able to turn out engines and boilers of the first class. It would be an odd sight to see a Chinese or Japanese squadron in the Atlantic, or ships bearing those Race fighting orientals there; and this is among the strange speculations which, before long, the world will probably witness.

Mr. ANTHONY TROLLOPE has written a letter to the London papers on a subject we have had occasion to write of before. This is the play lately brought out by Mr. CHARLES READE, founded on Mr. TROLLOPE's novel of Ralph the Heir. Mr. READE announced the play as by himself, and Mr. TROLLOPE, writing beforehand to acquaint the latter of his purpose, Mr. READE delicately intimated that there was no necessity for a reply, by stating in his letter that the law was with him in his procedure. Mr. TROLLOPE, nevertheless, objects to it, and, to our minds, very reasonably. It is plain that if the play succeeded, Mr. READE would get all the money; if it failed, Mr. TROLLOPE would share the discredit. It is remarkable that a writer so tenacious of his literary reputation, and of his right of property in his works as Mr. READE, should have omitted to take into account a consideration so obvious, and one which, be the letter of the law what it may, a broker author of distinguished reputation might fairly expect to have scrupulously regarded.

It appears that Mr. FRANK BUCKLAND, of London, has invented what he calls a "Vermin Asphyxiator," which has proved signally successful in destroying aphides, (on plants,) weevils, snakes and rats. Experiments have been made on all these with results highly satisfactory to everybody except the creatures themselves. It is almost too much to hope, but if Mr. BUCKLAND's invention can serve out mosquitoes in the same way, we can promise him a brisk demand if the "asphyxiator" should be introduced in America. Just at this time the inquiry would be peculiarly lively. In spite of the well-understood point of honor which induces residents to defend their neighborhood from the imputation of harboring mosquitoes, it must be admitted that most places near New-York are, at the moment, sadly afflicted by them. The intense and protracted heat, followed by heavy rains, appears to be responsible for the pests, and if any one really could devise a defense against them, he would be heartily and widely blessed, as well as more materially rewarded.

The dismal plain of Sahara continues to be soaked with blood. A horrible scene lately occurred at the execution of two felons, BAUDOIN and BOUILLAC. Both men swore they would not have their eyes bandaged, but would look death in the face. When they were forcibly blindfolded at least, they tore the cloths violently off and pushed the soldiers away. A correspondent says the scene was shocking and unparalleled. The unhappy wretches were at last overpowered by sheer numbers, and not only blinded, but forcibly lashed with strong cords to the posts. They were shot almost to pieces, yet, so firmly had they been tied, that their bodies remained perfectly unmoved as they had been placed. Both men rudely repulsed the priests who sought to console them, and both smoked pipes and sang songs almost to the last.

There is nothing which the Express would not do—and so we need not be surprised that it denies ever having defended the Tammany gang. Yet, all last year its columns were full of fulsome eulogies addressed to all who ventured to suggest that TWEED & Co. were thieves. Moreover, it has never published the proofs of their guilt to this day—surely sufficient evidence of its dishonesty. It would be absurd, however, to waste words on a paper which never has a sensible remark to make on any subject, which habitually mistakes falsehood for truth, and is only serious as an example of the dense stupidity to which the human mind may be brought by long and careful training.

Where is Tweed?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Repeated charges have been made in the public journals of the Democratic Party that a secret alliance exists between the Grant Republican Committee and that villainous swindler, Tweed. These charges and insinuations have received no denial, and recently, in a list of Tammany recruits which appeared in your paper as supporters of Greeley, the name of Tweed was omitted.

As one of the many Republicans with a preference for Grant over Greeley, but not yet decided in their convictions, and wishing light on all questions of the day, I write to ask you if you and Tweed have "clasped hands over the chasm" of fraud and theft? Because, if so, I shall know the position of the party on questions of "reform."

This alliance with Tweed would suffice to drive all honest men to the other side.

Give us the truth. HONESTY.

[The list of Tammany supporters of Greeley which we published on Saturday was far from correct, and Tweed's name was accidentally omitted from it. Tweed is not on our side—we would not have him at any price. The list in a more complete form will be published next week.]

THE COURT OF IMPEACHMENT.

Where Sanford E. Church, Ransom Almon, Rainbridge and Rosewater Have Heard the Nefarious Orders in the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Case.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Tribune.

SARATOGA, July 30.—As there seems to be some misapprehension in regard to the form and effect of the rulings of the Court yesterday, on the question as to the admissibility of FISK's conversation with the witness Bushnell, a few words of explanation may serve to correct it. It was claimed by the defense that such conversation tending to implicate the accused in the alleged conspiracy with FISK to harass and oppress the Union Pacific Railroad Company was inadmissible unless sufficient evidence had been adduced to show a conspiracy, and the Court, applying the objection solely to the charge under consideration, sustained the objection. There is no doubt that the ruling was one of much importance as affecting the particular case in question, but the general belief that it was intended to apply to the rest of the charges is without foundation. It could have no application to the other charges, and, indeed, it seems impossible that had the objection been raised as to them any such objection could have been seriously considered; for it can hardly be pretended by any one, except the defendant's counsel, that as to the New-York Fire and Warehouse Company, the Albany and Susquehanna litigation, and many others, a conspiracy combination between FISK and the accused has not been, particularly on a prima facie case, distinctly proved. It is proper here to say that, although all the Judges and many of the Senators voted to sustain the objection, they did so with considerable hesitation, some of them, and notably Chief Judge Church, expressing their doubt whether or not a conspiracy had been sufficiently shown. If further proof should be adduced the excluded testimony may yet be admitted notwithstanding objection. But whether or not, no uneasiness need be felt in regard to the general result of the trial, because, as the public are aware, the defense depends entirely on technicalities, and not upon the only proper issues—are the charges true or false? Thus far they have shown an utter inability to meet this issue, and have accordingly sought to hamper the investigation with technical objections, and to throw discredit on witnesses not favorable to them. How absurdly they have failed in this was shown in the cross-examination of Thomas D. Sherwood, who was tortured into admitting that his explanation to Judge Barnard was "in some sense" an apology. The truth is, Mr. Sherwood's apology was the usual courteous explanation which any gentleman would make, and was presented after his discharge, and not before. This cross-examination is seriously referred to as a sample of what daily occurs, and as an indication of the trivialities on which the defense hang their hopes of acquittal.

THE MILWAUKEE AND ST. PAUL RAILWAY CASE.

The cases of Aaron S. Bright against the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company were made the subject of inquiry today. F. N. Bangs, who was called late yesterday, but the important part of whose testimony was not reached, was recalled this morning, and gave in connection with Russell Sage a history of these litigations. From their evidence it appeared that the accused made an order on Aug. 21, 1869, restraining the defendants from constructing or operating any railroad crossing the one described in the three deeds referred to in the complaint, and from removing any of their property from the State. This order was made on the application of Ira Shafer, attorney for Bright, and on an undertaking in the insignificant sum of $250. It was made without notice to the defendants, and without it being made to appear that they were about to do anything to the injury of the plaintiff or endangering his rights. It did not appear in evidence, but is understood to be fact, that Ira Shafer saved Barnard from impeachment in 1867, when the resolution failed by one vote, which shows the wisdom of Bright in selecting his counsel. To make this order of practical use to the plaintiff, a second order was issued by the accused on or about the same date, appointing James M. Sweeny manager and receiver of the railroad in question, which is over 300 miles long. It did not appear that Mr. Sweeny had had any previous knowledge in regard to railroads other than can be gathered from daily journeys in a horse car, but it did appear that James M. was a brother of Peter B. Sweeny, and Clerk of the Supreme Court, and a politician of much influence, and that Ira Shafer appeared for the order. It appeared further that no part of said railroad was in this State; that the order was made without notice to defendants and without security, and that the whole proceeding caused a loss to the defendants of several millions.

A JUST JUDGE.

To complete the evidence in the case of Steinhart against Fank, examined yesterday, the plaintiff was placed on the stand, and amused the Court for half an hour with his stupid and bungling attempt to show that he did not apply to John R. Fellows because he had political or other influence with Barnard, and that the latter granted the order asked by Fellows, which he had refused to Townsend, because he was not the lawyer. The latter, in remark, that "he believed Judge Barnard to be a just Judge, and would give a just order," caused a general laugh, in which the accused himself heartily joined.

THOSE CHARGES.

Edward F. Underhill, who made a stenographic report of the testimony of George C. Hall before the Assembly Committee, (since deceased,) was called to identify the same, and Mr. Parsons then read Hall's testimony in full—a document which would fill up the entire issue of one printed, in the history of the $132 worth of opinion given by Fisk to Barnard.

THE JUDICIAL PILLORIES.

George Miles was called to testify to Mr. Barnard's sayings on the Bench, as specified under the thirty-seventh article. Several of the items were stricken out as inconsequential, but others were admitted. Mr. Miles maintained his self-possession under a severe cross-examination, and at the conclusion, when he said in response to a question that he was corresponding with the accused, and that he had admitted Mr. Beach acquitted himself creditably, a compliment in which, as Mr. Parsons said, everybody joined. Ex-Judge Birdseye testified to outrageous remarks of Barnard on the Bench. A strenuous effort was made by Mr. Beach to have the witness cross-examined, but when his objection was overruled by a large majority, the spirit of indecency which animated his client on the occasion referred to by the witness, took possession of him, and he insisted on the latter detailing the repulsive observations from the Bench, which are too obscene to be repeated here. Instead of permitting the prosecution to put in evidence the testimony of Judge Barnard before the Assembly Committee, Mr. Beach, with a premonition of what was coming, rose and left the room, while others, equally assumed to go as to stay, kept their seats, and the witness continued, till just at the critical moment Mr. Beach interposed and stopped the proceeding, following up his objection to the prosecution's proposal to consider the testimony taken by the Assembly Committee, as read in evidence.

BARNARD'S CONNECTION WITH THE RING.

So far the business was more interesting than usual, but the most noteworthy incident of the day was the production of Andrew J. Garvey, formerly plasterer to the Corporation, whose testimony established Barnard's connection with the old ring of which Fisk, Fields, Tweed, Sweeny and others were component parts. The production of Mr. Garvey was treated as a sensation in the Court room, the defense apparently being taken as much by surprise as any one else. He was, of course, badgered and insulted by Mr. Beach, and displayed great nervousness on the stand, but condensed himself with such modesty and evident truthfulness as to win the sympathy of his auditors.

WHO PAID FOR PLASTERING BARNARD'S HOUSE?

The two points in his testimony worthy of special notice are that he had seen Barnard with Fisk in the latter's box at the Grand Opera-house, and that in the latter part of 1868 Barnard had hired him to whitewash Barnard's house in Madison-av. "I have seen Tweed when I told me to have it done. I saw him anything I done I want." Garvey did two jobs for Barnard, amounting to $1,000, for which he believed he never paid him. It did not appear who did the work at time, but it did appear that Tweed was in the habit of using Erie Railway, and that the work was done under his authority, the orders received by Barnard in favor of the Erie Railway may be seen not to have been without remuneration.

OTHER ACTS OF THE ACCUSED.

Deputy Sheriff Jos. O. Stevens produced evidence that the accused is and was at the time when he granted an order on the application of John Scott against the Tammany Society, as member of said Society. The fact that Barnard took part in a caucus of the members, at which it was determined to apply for the order in question, was not adduced in evidence, but is well known. Witnesses were examined in the case of Elmendorf against Savage, and testified that the accused made illegal and exorbitant allow

LIBERAL LYING.

Crushing Exposure of Tribune Lies.

Mr. Greeley's Organ Denouncing Greeley Men.

The Exact Truth About Each "Defaulter."

Complete Vindication of the President from the Tribune's Charges.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 30, 1872.

The organ of Mr. Greeley, last Saturday, published a list of what it calls defaulters under Grant. The Tribune lies were searched, and it is easy to be conceived that some results, so far as the attempt of truth is concerned, might have been produced by such labor. But, in addition to that, a young and inexperienced Bummer of this city was sent round among the Department to gather a space sufficient for pretending that he was sent for the Boston Journal. Whatever representations he makes of conversations are perverted and falsified, as one would expect.

For the sake of showing how little reliance can be placed in any statements found in the Tribune, more than because any vindication of the persons assailed is necessary, it will be useful to go through its specific charges seriatim, and note the facts in each case.

Barton Able, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District of Missouri; October, 1870, suit commenced against him by his sureties for about $650,000, alleged to be unaccounted for by him as a Government officer.

Ableman appointed by Johnson, September, 1868, and removed by Grant, May, 1869, soon after his inauguration. Amount originally due, $308,121 66, which was reduced by subsequent credits, to $179,025 26. Able gave two bonds for $100,000 each, and suits are now pending. Supports Greeley.

John Speer, Collector of Internal Revenue for Kansas, arrested at Lawrence, Kansas, in September, 1870, charged with being engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the revenue and embezzling $150,000 of Government bonds.

Speer was appointed by Lincoln in 1863, reappointed by Johnson in June, 1868, and removed by Johnson, October, 1868. The case against him and his sureties was illegally compromised by Gen. Pleasonton, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the approval of the Solicitor of the Treasury not having been obtained. The compromise was for about $11,000. Gen. Pleasonton supports Greeley.

John Van Horn, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue, under Collector Speer, of Kansas; arrested in September, 1870, charged with conspiring to defraud the revenue.

M. W. Barricklow, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue, under Collector Speer, of Kansas; arrested in September, 1870, charged with conspiring to defraud the revenue.

Deputy Collectors are not responsible to the Government directly, but to the Collector. Van Horn and Barricklow were removed at same time as Speer, but there was no loss to Government through them not covered by Pleasonton's compromise. There have been conjectures that Pleasonton made more money than the Government out of those compromises. Gen. Pleasonton was dismissed.

John A. Phillips, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth District of New-York; defaulter in the sum of $30,000 or more; fled to Europe in March, 1870.

The Collector restored the full amount to the Government, as he was obliged by his bond. There is no such thing in law as a Deputy Collector being in default to the Government.

Justus F. Bailey, Internal Revenue Collector for the Thirty-second District of New-York; proved a defaulter in March, 1870, in the sum of $134,548; made no returns of taxes collected and not deposited, collections from stamps not deposited, special deposit account with the Secretary of the Treasury, collections on spirits and tobacco unaccounted for, amount collected on account of storekeepers' salaries, and amount collected on account of gangers' fees; the greater part of the money here was used in defrauding the revenue, and a complete record of his defalcations was left by him at the time he absconded. Sureties ample, but no step taken toward collecting from them. Henry Cobb and other prominent Grant men among them.

This is an unfortunate case for quotation in the Tribune. Bailey was appointed May 5, 1865, on recommendation of Horace Greeley, Senator Fenton, Theodore Tilton and D. C. Littlejohn. Mr. Greeley solicited his retention in a strong personal letter. Suits are now pending against his sureties, and have been for a long time. Would doubtless support Mr. Greeley, if in the country.

Welling Hurst, Collector of the Sixth District of Tennessee; was suspended for neglect of duty in January, 1871, and his Deputy, Thomas, placed in charge of the office.

Appointed Dec. 1, 1869, removed Jan. 1, 1871; amount due, $711 38. Suit for recovery against bond for $5,000 now pending. Supports Greeley.

Col. Alexander was arrested in January, 1871, on a charge of defalcation in office while Superintendent of Internal Revenue in New-Orleans.

Alexander was never in the Revenue service. Was professional confidence man and blackmailer. Was arrested at the instance of the Revenue Office, for pretending to be a Supervisor, and on that pretense trying to black-mail.

Morgan L. Harris, ex-Collector of Internal Revenue for the Seventh District of New-York, sued commenced in the United States Circuit Court, New-York, in March, 1871, against his bondsmen to recover $600,000 for the alleged loss of money to the Government, caused by Morgan's accepting worthless bonds for the removal of 100,000 gallons of whisky.

Here is another case of stupidity, or wickedness, in the compiler. Harris was appointed November, 1869, by Johnson. The Senate would not confirm his appointment, and he went out of office March 3, 1869, months before Gen. Grant had been nominated for President. Suits were brought by this Administration. He supports Greeley.

Rev. M. S. Gaddis, Ex-Internal Revenue Assessor for the Second District of Ohio, arrested in April, 1871, for neglect of duty while in office, for receiving presents and bribes, and for offering a bribe to his Assistant Assessor to induce him to allow frauds to be committed in the office.

The name is M. S. Gaddis. He was appointed by Johnson, July, 1866, and resigned in December, 1868, before the advent of the present Administration. He is dead, and his vote is lost to Greeley.

J. Miss, Ex-Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue in Texas, committed suicide on the 27th of November, 1871, in consequence of a fear that he would be arrested for embezzling Government funds.

Miss was appointed by Johnson December, 1868, and removed by Grant. I am informed that he committed suicide after his removal, and in another that he is alive and a staunch supporter of Greeley. Do not know which statement is correct.

George A. Lawrence, a revenue officer in New-York City; arrested and indicted in March, 1870, for blackmailing Francis Gunsenger, a West-street liquor-dealer; released by the Court on the ground that he was not a revenue officer under the law.

Floyd Foster, a revenue officer in New-York City; arrested and indicted in March, 1872, for blackmailing Francis Gunsenger, a West-street liquor-dealer; released by the Court on the ground that he was not a revenue officer under the law.

Two cases more of blackmailers pretending to be officers of the Government to aid their infamous business, never officers of the Government, but charged by the Tribune as defaulters under Grant.

Gen. Daniel S. Stanton, Collector of the Fifth Internal Revenue District of Maryland; charged in March, 1870, with being a defaulter in the sum of $80,000.

Appointed by Grant and removed as soon as his Admin was supposed. Supports Greeley.

George D. Crozet, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth District of Missouri; arrested in April, 1871, for being a defaulter, and a suit commenced against him and his sureties, alleging a balance of $[illegible] in Government funds.

This the above-named Barton Able, with suits against his sureties for about $650,000. Did not Administration will recover without doubt.

W. C. V. Hicks, Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second Congress District of Mississippi, defaulter in the sum of $[illegible] as accounted for by the books in the Treasury Department; appointed Aug. 20, 1869.

Was appointed Aug. 1868, and went out Nov. 4, 1869. He served one day, during which he resigned for the Assessor's list, and then declined the office. Held continuously till his successor was appointed. By receiving for the list he became a debtor on the books of the Department for its amount, $[illegible]. He made no collection on the list, and owes the Government not one cent, but is still held in bond of $[illegible] against which suit pro forma has been brought.

B. S. Emery, Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second Congress District of Mississippi; defaulter to the amount of $[illegible], according to the books of the Treasury Department; appointed Nov. 14, 1869. Suits are said to have been commenced against Hicks and Emery, although the representative of the district has never heard of any, and can learn nothing of them.

Appointed and removed by Grant. Amount due, $[illegible] 40, secured by two bonds of $50,000 each. Papers for suit have been forwarded to the United States Attorney. Supports Greeley.

Louis F. Wetmore, Revenue Inspector in New-York; arrested in January, 1870, charged with having falsely gauged 192 gallons of whisky with intent to defraud the revenue; held to bail in $[illegible].

Eben Farrington, Revenue Inspector in New-York; arrested in January, 1870, on a charge of having falsely gauged [illegible] gallons of whisky with intent to defraud the revenue; held to bail in $[illegible].

Two cases of bad Johnson officers, appointed and removed by Grant—Wetmore, June, 1868, and Farrington, March, 1869. Both Greeley men.

F. A. Stevens, Ex-United States Ranger and Gauger in New-York; arrested in February, 1870, in St. Louis, charged with the perpetration of frauds in connection with a distillery in New-York, to the amount of $2,000,000; brought to New-York and committed to answer.

Another case like the two preceding it. Was appointed by Johnson August, 1868, and removed June, 1869, by Grant. Do not know whether the frauds for which he was arrested were committed before or after he was dismissed the service.

Horace Bouton, Assessor of New-Orleans, arrested in March, 1870, on a charge of fraud.

Bouton was appointed by Johnson, January, 1868, and removed by Grant, June, 1869. He adheres to the fortunes of H. G.

Ex-Congressman Wm. B. Stokes, Supervisor of Internal Revenue for Tennessee; arrested in Washington Oct. 25, 1871; accessory to defrauding the Treasury out of $60,000 by means of fraudulent bounty claims.

It is a funny bit of wickedness to charge the Stokes frauds to Gen. Grant, since Stokes had no connection with the revenue service except under Johnson, and the fraudulent bounty claims were worked up while occupying a seat in the House of Representatives, to which he was appointed by sundry voters of Tennessee.

George B. Thatcher, of the United States Pension Office at Philadelphia; convicted in June, 1870, of embezzling $300, and sentenced to fifteen months and a fine of $525, with a recommendation to the mercy of the President.

Gen. Wm. A. Lawrence, United States Pension Agent at New-York; discovered to be a defaulter April, 1871, to the amount of about $47,000; absconded.

W. F. Forbes, Invalid Pension Agent at Philadelphia; suspended Sept. 30, 1871, on a charge of being a defaulter to the amount of $25,000; he expressed his willingness to restore the amount to the Government, and was held in $20,000 bail.

Three cases pretty correctly stated. They were discovered by a special effort of the Pension Bureau to find out all its dishonest officers, for which great credit is deserved.

Judge J. W. Wright, Indian Pension Agent for soldiers of the Creek, Cherokee, and Seminole Nations; charged, in 1871, with irregularities involving about $600,000.

Alexander Clapperton, Acting Indian Pension Agent at Fort Smith, Arkansas, under J. W. Wright; arrested in January, 1872, on charge of defrauding the Government while holding that position.

Wright was not an officer of the Government. He was an agent of the Indians to obtain their bounties. The Government has no such office as "Indian Pension Agent." Clapperton was one of those through whose neglect or criminality Wright's frauds were made possible. It was the Indians who suffered the loss for the most part, which may add to the infamy of the crime. But since Grant became President neither Wright nor Clapperton have stolen one dollar of the Indians' money, or the Government's. The officers of the Administration have been pursuing them more than two years, and some of the money is likely to be recovered, though most of the cases on which criminal suits could be brought have become outlawed with lapse of years. Wright is the special friend of Defreis, Ex-Public Printer, who is doing all he can to enable Wright to keep his plunder. Wright was chosen a delegate to Cincinnati, but was induced, for prudential reasons, not to go. They all are reformers and vote for H. G.

Major A. R. Calhoun, Pension Agent at Philadelphia; charged with being a defaulter, November, 1871.

The loss in Major Calhoun's office was not through Calhoun's act, but that of a subordinate, and has been made good. Calhoun, I am informed, supports Grant.

W. T. Collins, United States Pension Agent at Washington; discovered to be a defaulter to the amount of about $60,000, in February, 1872.

This was a most unfortunate case, both for the Government and the Agent. Collins was one of the few soldiers who suffered amputation of a leg at the hip joint and recovered. He had always done well and honestly his duties in other positions, which (see Mr. Greeley's Boston speech) was enough to entitle him to advancement. He fell before the new temptations. His deficiency was brought to light by a series of special tests, devised by Commissioner Baker. There has been some difficulty in making up his accounts as a basis for a suit, but suits were brought against the bondsmen as soon as possible.

George A. Batchelder, Secretary of Dakota Territory; $9,000 of Territorial funds disappeared to be unaccounted for in June, 1871; an effort was making to compromise the matter, and it was thought it would be successful.

Batchelder was never in default, and never charged with irregularities. He went out of the service in February last. The books of the Department show him to be a debtor to the amount of $[illegible]. He promises to file vouchers for disbursements to cover the whole amount, but if he does not, is able to make good the debt by paying cash. Has no funds unaccounted for in June, 1871.

The statements made about losses and defaulters in the Post-office Department is atrociously false from beginning to end. In the first place, it calls in question the official statement of the Department, and the figures published in the Times and other papers. Of the statement it says:

"As an example of its falsifications, it returns New-York State as not having a single Post-office defaulter during the Grant Administration!"

There has not been a defalcation by a Postmaster in the State of New-York under Grant's Administration. The Tribune's exclamation points is an abbreviated lie. Since April 1 there was one such ordered in the State for a balance of about $2,000, due from the Gloversville office. But it was paid up before the papers could be served.

"Curious to know, it continues, "how the document was manufactured, inquiry was made at the Department in Washington, and the following facts were elicited: The statement is nothing more than a list of the amounts due the Government from men which have been instituted during Grant's Administration against postmasters who have defaulted. In the judgment of the Post-office no man is a defaulter against whom suit has not been entered."

When a Postmaster goes out of office, his accounts are immediately balanced in the Sixth Auditor's Office, and if he is found in debt to the Government, a draft is made on him for whatever the amount may be. If not promptly paid suit is instituted. There is only a few days delay, so that any statement of defaulters must be a statement of those against whom suits are pending. There are a large number of cases of this kind, but the amounts are generally only a few hundred dollars, and often less than one. All the data of the office, whether the amounts were good or not, (they are all supposed to be till the determination of suits,) were officially by authority were included in the official statement of $[illegible].

"Finally," the Tribune says, "defalcations that have most compromised the honour of political friends or other parties do not appear in this official statement, nor do those related by special act of Congress."

There has not been a single defalcation upon Grant's Administration on account of political favor, or for any other reason. Conceived and led by Kimball and related in a single defaulter. It has in two or three instances released Postmasters from loss by fire or robbery, for which they were blameless. About a hundred odd cases of defalcations have been settled by compromise on the advice of District-Attorneys that securities were worthless, and that the Department getting all it could hope for under any circumstances.

The Tribune, to make up the total losses to the Department by defalcation, adds to the official statement the Horton defalcation of $315,000 and his alleged defalcations by Wood in Indiana, both of which amounts it subsequently states have been made up to the Government in full. The addition is not even then performed correctly, but the amount is stated $8,000 too large, showing the recklessness and stupidity of the entire fabrication.

Out of a list of thirty-nine specific charges of defalcations in the Post-office Department, twenty-seven are Post-office clerks, mail-carriers and deputies who are not employed by the Government, are not known to it, and it is not responsible for their appointment, and does not lose by their irregularities. The Postmaster is the party responsible to the Government, and the only person in it who can be in default to it. In those thirty cases the Department has not suffered a dollar of loss. Here are the three first cases for illustration:

W. B. Hathaway, clerk in the Harrison Post-office; charged with embezzling a registered letter; arrested; arrested in Chariton, Clay, Iowa, February, 1870.

O. A. Pope, clerk in the Rahway, Delaware, Post-office; arrested June 22, 1870, in $5,000 bail before United States Commissioner Hanks, on a charge of embezzling and secreting a letter containing $12 in bank bills; preferred by James Gayler, Special Post-office Agent; examination set for June 21, 1870.

Andrew Stafford, a mail agent between Baltimore and Philadelphia; arrest 4 June 23, 1870, for robbing the Unit-d States mail of letters and money; he admitted his guilt, and was committed in default of $10,000 bail; sentenced for five years."

In twenty-four other cases, precisely similar, the names only, and not the specific statements, are here given. As before mentioned, they are not officers of the Government, and have occasioned it no loss. The loss in all cases falls upon the postmasters or their bondsmen:

Christopher E. Duran, a letter-carrier in the New-York Post-office.

Nathaniel J. Gilbert, Assistant Postmaster at Spuyten Duyvel.

Joseph Hartwich, a letter-carrier attached to Station H, New-York City.

John T. Lawrence, a letter-carrier from Station F, on a Third-avenue route.

E. A. McLoughlin, alias John W. McLean, formerly Assistant Postmaster at Canton, O.

Paul H. Lanfantin, a Post-office clerk in New-York.

Isaac S. Lunnigan, a letter-carrier in New-York City.

George H. Chase, a messenger in the Post-office Department, Washington.

F. W. Lendman, a night clerk in the Louisville Post-office.

Francis Le Clair, a letter-carrier of Greenbush, N. Y.

Michael Murphy, a clerk in the New-York Post-office.

James J. Reilly, Assistant Superintendent of the Foreign Department of the New-York Post-office.

Two clerks of the Cleveland, Ohio, Post-office. (Names not given.)

Samuel Gorley, a letter-carrier in Brooklyn.

Marshall S. P. Lowe, a clerk in the Mailing Department of the Boston Post-office.

James F. Brady, a clerk in the New-York Post-office.

Robert Elder, a New-York letter-carrier.

The Assistant Postmaster at Fort Wayne.

Robert Dale, a clerk in the Baltimore Post-office.

John F. Wood, Deputy Postmaster at Indianapolis, Ind.

David E. George, Deputy Postmaster at San Bernardino, Cal.

Miss Morey, an employe in the Post-office at McGrawville, Cortland County, N. Y.

John S. Kirwan, a Post-office clerk at Station H, New-York.

All the dishonest drug and dry goods clerks in the country would so properly as the above be placed in a list of "defaulters under Grant."

The other cases under the Post-office Department are as follows:

—— McCoy, Postmaster at Montevello, Mo., arrested in April, 1871, for purloining money from registered letters, some of which was found in his possession.

No additional information, and no knowledge of whether statement is correct. Evidently not a defaulter.

F. A. McCartney, Disbursing Officer of the Post-office Department, Washington.

The case of McCartney is too well known to need much explanation. The Tribune puts the loss to the Government at $24,000. This is much exaggerated. A considerable amount has already been realized from his property, and suits are pending against his bonds. He died in the insane asylum soon after his deficiency was discovered. One Capt. Adams, a Greeley man, has been charged with sharing what McCartney took from the Government. Possibly this has no foundation, except the fact that a large part of it was buried in a Virginia stone-quarry, in which Adams was chiefly interested.

—— Reed, Postmaster at Jacksonville, Fla., son of Gov. Reed, of that State, having become a defaulter in the sum of about $11,000, a special agent was sent to investigate the matter, with instructions to arrest him unless he refunded the amount. It was thought his friends would make good the amount, and the Department removed him from office.

It was discovered that something was wrong in Reed's accounts, and Special Agent He-brook went down and collected the money immediately. There is still a small deficiency in the office accounts, of $764 95, and suits against the bond is pending.

N. R. Kemp, Postmaster at Fairview, Penn.; arrested in May, 1871, by a Government detective, for robbing the mail of a pension certificate, and forging vouchers to the same; held in $6,000 bail to appear before the United States Commissioner the next day.

Joshua A. Sheldon, Postmaster at Sparta, Ohio, was taken to Cleveland, Ohio, May 15, 1871, charged with removing and using a stamp time canceled postage stamps; he pleaded guilty, and was fined $100 and costs.

No direct loss, and but slight indirect loss, in either of above cases. The speedy detection and punishment will be noted.

John W. Horton, Superintendent of the Money Order Department of the New-York Post-office; defaulter in the sum of $115,311 95; the circumstances of the case were made public Sept. 14, 1871. In July Postmaster Jones called for reports from heads of all the departments in the habit of receiving or disbursing money. All, with the exception of Norton, furnished the required information; Norton deferred presenting his statement from day to day on various pretexts. Believing something was wrong, the Postmaster sent to Washington for a special agent to assist in an investigation. Norton's check-book and accounts tallied, but upon a comparison with those of the Sub-Treasury a difference of $115,311 95 against the Post-office was discovered. Upon being charged with the abstraction of the money, Norton at once confessed his guilt, only alleging that he had been tempted and yielded to the temptation. He placed all his assets, which amounted to about $15,000, at the disposal of the bondsmen of Postmaster Jones. The bondsmen promptly made good the amount of the defalcation.

This case might properly be included in the list of clerks and deputies. But it deserves a separate mention. The facts are given correctly enough except in the last statement. The bondsmen did not promptly make good the loss. It is not long since they had not paid it. Horace Greeley is one of them, and deserves a place in the list of defaulters, with his name in conspicuous type. Every dollar will be promptly paid, but suits may be required, if not already ordered.

William A. Whittaker, Postmaster at Bowling Green, Wood County, Ohio; arrested in December, 1871, on a charge of embezzling money-order funds.

Government was fully protected from loss.

Frank Foster, Postmaster at Kansas City, Mo.; detected in March, 1871, in retaining a portion of the salaries of the clerks in his employ, and appropriating the money to his own use.

No loss to Government. Money was paid and deposited here in Washington, and he was made to refund to the clerks every cent out of which he had defrauded them.

Geo. W. Dugald, Jr., Postmaster at Fort Wayne, Ind.; arraigned in the Criminal Court, July 25, 1871, on a charge of embezzling the public funds. He was also charged with embezzling the funds of a Loan Association in Fort Wayne.

No such Postmaster and no such case known. Appears to be pure invention.

Of three other cases, namely, Hays, of Tuscaloosa, Ferris, first in Ohio, Postmaster at Alexandria, charged with robbing mails, and Francis, of Houston, La., charged with robbing money orders, I have no information. Statement of Tribune in regard to them is probably correct in general, and may be in particulars. None of them are "defaulters." They are, if statements are correct, robbers.

During the past decade, while this Second term Treasury of United States has been managed by Gen. Spinner, and curiously enough, escaped without the loss of a dollar up to the Administration of Grant. The prevailing fever, however, took hold of it, and few the amount stolen: Edwins, $6,500; Marden, $13,000; Johnson, $60,000; and unknown, $20,000.

Instead of $20,500, the amount is $73,000, which is nearer the truth than most of the specifications.

Charles E. Edwins, convicted in Winter of 1870-71 of embezzling $6,500 from the United States Treasury; was pardoned in March, 1871, by the President, on account of his health.

Amount was $6,749 35.

Victor J. Powell, a clerk in the Second Auditor's office; charged, October, 1871, with being implicated in the bounty frauds of William B. Stokes; fined, February, 1872, $500 and costs.

True. But frauds were detected before consummation, and Government suffered no loss. How, then, is Powell a defaulter?

Seth Johnson, clerk in the cash-room of the United States Treasurer's office; discovered to be a defaulter in the Winter of 1871-72, to the amount of $60,000, and is still in custody.

True, except as to amount, which was about two-thirds as much as stated. It was $37,364 20. Was tried and convicted, and is serving his sentence in prison.

Frederick A. Marden, Chief Clerk Division of Accounts, United States Treasurer's office; arrested in the Winter of 1871-72, to be a defaulter in the sum of $12,000; he is still confined.

Never clerk. True, amount was $11,448 97. Tried, convicted and imprisoned.

—— Philips, alias Porter, charged with embezzling money from the Sub-Treasury in New-York, was arrested at Queenstown, Ireland, in April, 1870, and sent to jail for eight days.

Cannot state specifically, except that Government suffered no loss, the Treasurer at New-York and his bondsmen being responsible.

H. E. Hulburd, Controller of the Currency, charged with receiving bribes; forced to resign March, 1872, in consequence of a report made by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, which exonerated him from any dishonest motives, but advised his resignation or removal.

This is a piece of pure "cussedness." There is not a particle of evidence, nor a charge that Hulburd ever did aught but his duty in his office. The man who, with wicked intentions, as he confesses, induced Hulburd to accept a present of a horse or horses, and carriage, which he did with good intentions, is now a supporter of Mr. Greeley. The present did not have the effect or produce the favors he expected, and to revenge himself he swore to his own infamy. Hulburd improperly compromised his official position, and though acknowledged to be a good and faithful officer was forced to resign.

"Low" Hulburd, Bank Examiner in Philadelphia; defaulter in the sum of $38,000, while cashier of the Farmers' National Bank of Richmond, Va., in 1866; after being forced to resign his position, he was appointed to the position of Bank Examiner in Philadelphia by his brother, Coetroller Hulburd; he resigned the office of Bank Examiner a short time since."

Some such charges as the above have been repeated, but were never sustained, and had nothing to do with his resignation. No complaint is pretended to be made against him as a Federal officer.

Charles Callender, Ex-Bank Examiner for New-York; arrested Dec. 20, 1871, charged with receiving bribes from the Ocean Bank, of New-York City, to the amount of $70,000; held by United States Commissioner Osborn in $20,000 bail, Jan. 11, 1872, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Borrowed money on collaterals. It is reported by the officers that the collaterals will pay the loan in full. There is no evidence that the loan was regarded other than a regular business transaction either by the bank or Callender. He cannot be called a defaulter. Of course, there is no loss to Government.

Henry T. Allen, keeper of the Sub-Treasury in New-York; charged with defrauding the Government by means of false vouchers. An indefinite postponement of the case was asked by the District-Attorney in January, 1870. Allen forged a voucher for the purchase of twenty-four dozen maps at $9.372, and twelve dozen brooms at $6.372, making $144, upon which he drew the money; was immediately detected and dismissed.

Frank McGraw, a watchman at the State Department, charged in September, 1871, with stealing, in connection with George H. Chase, a Post-office messenger, gold and silver treaty seals to the value of $400 or $600. He confessed, and the seals were recovered in a melted condition, January, 1872. He pleaded guilty to petty larceny by consent, and was fined $600 and sentenced to three months in jail. A watchman thoroughly trusted for many years; a small case of "petty larceny" magnified into a "defalcation."

John Logan, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, charged October, 1870, with presenting fraudulent accounts. The charge was preferred by his deputy, who prepared the accounts and knew them to be fraudulent. It was thought at the time that no action would be taken in the matter. Was appointed by Johnson. Gov. Palmer, a Greeley man, being one of the indorsers of his application; had been a gallant soldier. There is a balance of $6,935 81 against him, made up of fees earned by his office and reported by him, but which he had not collected. He asked time to collect and pay over the fees, which has been granted him. No evidence of criminal intent.

W. A. Britton, United States Marshal for Western District of Arkansas, defaulter to the amount of $11,000. Evidence ample enough to convict him in the possession of the Government. He was not prosecuted, but simply dismissed. His successor, Root, was recently relieved and Britton reinstated. One of Mr. Beck's stories. In his letter of the 24th inst. Controller Taylor says in reply: "Mr. Britton is not, and never was a defaulter to the amount of $11,000, or any other amount. His accounts as late Marshal are closed on the books of the Treasury Department, and were closed by the payment of money found due to him from the United States.

CUSTOM.

The amount standing in the books of the [Customs] office Jan. 1, 1872, against ex-Collectors of Grant's Administration was $20,000. To this must be added the defalcation of Stannard, of Burlington, Vt., of $26,000, and Robb, of Savannah, Ga., $14,000, a total of full $147,000. In this office the embezzlements are numerous in number, and the amounts taken by each individual, except in isolated cases, small. The reason of this is that Collectors are required by law to deposit daily, and are never allowed to keep on hand, except in the offices of the ports where the business is large, more than $2,000."

Of the $98,000 standing Jan. 1, 1872, $20,000 have since been secured. It is believed all but about $28,000 of it will be made good during the year. Stannard, of Vermont, has gone into bankruptcy and given up his estate, which is believed to be ample to reimburse Government for all loss. His accounts are not made up, and the exact amount of deficiency is not known. Robb was robbed by his deputy and book-keeper, Wellmans, father and son. Has given good bond of indemnity, and Government will lose nothing. Why then should these two amounts be added to swell the Government loss? The Customs business on which the $98,000, if not collected, would be a loss, is between $600,000,000 and $800,000,000. The ratio of loss, if none of the $98,000 were saved, would be one eighteenth of one per cent, or one cent in $2,000.

Gen. Richard N. Bowerman, Deputy Collector of Customs at Baltimore; arrested in September, 1870; charge, embezzling $12,000 of the public funds, and presenting a fraudulent claim for $6,500 in gold; indicted in September, 1871, and pleaded "not guilty."

Convicted and sentenced to two years in prison; now serving out his time.

Nathaniel Gale, clerk in the Naval Office Department of the Boston Custom-house; charged, May, 1870, with defrauding the Government to the amount of $6,000, gold.

Conspired with a clerk of an importing firm to steal and divide extra duties concealed in the Appraiser's office. No loss to Government. Promptly dismissed as soon as detected by Special Agent. Amount, somewhat less than $6,000, which Collector issued subpœna to secure in from Gale.

Wm. A. Gray, temporary clerk in the Boston Custom-house; arrested in Boston, in 1871, on a charge of dealing in counterfeit revenue stamps.

No record of such a clerk ever in the service.

Rodney W. Dennis, Collector of Customs at Baltimore; arrested, November, 1870, on a charge of defalcation in office, in using the public funds for his private business, and his office placed in the hands of a United States Treasury agent.

No such Collector as Dennis at Baltimore ever; or harassed, consequently could not have been accused as above. There is such a Collector at Buffalo. He is a good Collector, and no charges against him.

Wm. D. Cass, Inspector in the New-York Custom-house; arrested, May, 1870, on a charge of conspiring with John A. Macnade and William H. Green to defraud the revenue by stealing imported goods.

Reported as dismissed "for cause," Dec. 26, 1871. No loss to Government, or to anybody else, so far as appears.

—— Palfrey, Collector of Customs at Salem, Mass.; charged with defrauding the Government.

Is Collector now. No charge of defrauding the Government against him. His accounts are all right. There has been some trouble about a seizure recently made, and the Government has thus far refused to allow his claims for protection.

E. D. Orton, employe in the New-York Custom-house; removed April, 1870, for receiving certain sums for conferring favors upon outside persons, which sums he failed to place to the proper account.

Hugh M. Maxwell, an employe in the New-York Custom-house; removed April, 1870, for receiving money for conferring favors upon outside persons, which he failed to place to his proper account.

These two are fine, two very wicked persons, but not defaulters to the Government, who loses nothing by them. Second name is probably Harrison, instead of Merrick.

The Navy Department also aids in swelling the amount, $476,883 55 having been taken by the Pay-masters, including the defaulting clerk in the Brooklyn Navy-yard. There are other sums to increase this sum, but the accounts are not settled, so that it is difficult to arrive at the actual amounts lost.

This is an outrageous falsehood, in general terms, and to be generally denounced as such. The total amount of defalcations under Gen. Grant's Administration in the Navy Department is $98,000, and not one cent of it chargeable to any man appointed by President Grant or once he came into office. The ratio to the money handled by the Department is almost too small to calculate.

The Tribune list closes with Hodge. His case is pretty familiar to the country. Hodge was a Democrat, intrusted with Government funds by a former Administration and not removed by this. A large share of the embezzlement was done before Gen. Grant became President. It is a bad case, but he is one of the Democratic "horse-thieves" now courted by the Greeley Party. J. E. C.

SUMMER OFF THE FENCE.

The Long-Expected Letter Appears—He Pledges Himself to Vote for Greeley.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—Mr. Sumner has at last announced himself. A month ago the country was anxious to know to whom he would give his support. Yesterday it had made up its mind in advance of him how he must go, and his letter adds no information. The common sentiment expressed here is that it will have no effect. He innocently supposed yesterday that the world was in horrid suspense to know whether he had decided for Greeley or Grant, and while, to increase it still more, permitting statements to go to the country that his letter would be given to the Press to-morrow, he refused to permit any one to say who he would declare for. And yet nobody doubted or has doubted that he would pursue just the course he has foreshadowed in these dispatches several days ago. He has magnanimously in his own opinion given North Carolina and the country to Mr. Greeley. He thinks the revolution which is to deprive Grant of all the States but possibly four, will now begin. He has privately hesitated over the question of civil rights, and has stated over and over that he would not declare for Greeley till he knew whether he could depend upon the support of Democrats. They have evidently asked him. As least he inserts himself centrally. All this he privately says he does not leave the Republican Party in voting for Greeley, and the Democrats do not leave their party in giving the same votes. The letter has been printed in the Globe office, and revised and retouched, and carefully laid away and returned to Sumner. It may be considered the best, in his judgment, that he could do. It occupies the equivalent of four columns in the Globe. In all this ado about a small matter, the man who recently arraigned the President for caution, exhibits his own remarkable timidity and modesty.

LABOR REFORMERS.

Proceedings of the National Conference Yesterday.

The conference of labor reformers, called by Mr. E. M. Chamberlin, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Labor Reform National Committee, assembled at 10¾ A. M., yesterday, at Germania Assembly Rooms. About thirty-five persons were present, and were called to order by Mr. Chamberlin. He said that the delegates and members of the Labor Reform had been called together to consider the political situation and see what had best be done for their own interests. Something must be done. The history of the movement within the past two months showed that it was their duty to show themselves sympathetic with those who are organizing the war against the capitalists.

A motion to appoint a Committee on Credentials was then offered.

Mr. Dalton thought that this was a premeditated attempt to carry this assemblage for Grant or Greeley. This was the first great day Grant in the world for converting with conventions, and the attempt will be made this evening. He wanted a dividing line. He wouldn't have Grant, and he couldn't go Greeley. (Loud applause.) He would offer his resignation from the Convention, if it was to come to a question between them.

The motion to appoint a Committee on Credentials was carried, and Messrs. Taylor, Thompson, Van Trump and McNeal was chosen. A recess was then taken until 2 P. M.

THE RECESS.

It now became plain that certain leading spirits of the Conference had sold out the Greeleyites. There was a concerted plan to exclude all persons who were pronounced Grant men, while those in favor of Greeley were to be admitted.

Credentials from representatives of New-York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Connecticut, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, Georgia and Virginia were presented to the Committee and refused.

A BOLT.

The labor reformers, excluded from the Conference unfairly, as they believe, issued a call for a meeting in another hall in the evening.

A vote was then taken for nominees for President and Vice-President of the United States, which resulted in the unanimous choice of Grant and Wilson.

At an evening session held by a portion of the delegates, a resolution was adopted adjourning the meeting to Aug. 22, at Philadelphia, when nominations for President and Vice-President will be made.

THE SOUTH.

The Street-Car Riot in Savannah.

SAVANNAH, Ga., July 30.—The riot yesterday afternoon was occasioned by continued attempts of the negroes to ride in the "white cars." The railroad company took no action against the several engineers detailed by the young men. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon two negroes were expelled from the cars. The excitement increased, and toward night 2,000 negroes lined the streets, and many white persons were also out. About 8 o'clock a car was fired into by negroes, and the white men in the car returned the fire. Every car that passed after that was fired into. The firemen on the road became paralized, and was kept up for about an hour, the scattered shooting in all directions. About 11 o'clock two ladies and two children were shot by roaming negroes while standing on the steps in front of their houses. The police were armed with muskets and ordered out by the Mayor, but the cars stopped running and the demonstration ceased. Today everything is quiet. Three young men have been arrested, charged with shooting pistols from the cars, and their cases have been postponed by the United States Commissioner until Thursday. The following is a list of the casualties: Mrs. Barber, two painful buckshot wounds in the breast; three children were shot in the body and one in the temple; Mrs. Bates, shot in the stomach; two chilmen slightly wounded; M. H. Bond, hit in the wrist; Henry Baker, shot in the foot. Several negroes were wounded but none killed.

ANOTHER FIRE.

—Loss Mutilated at Upward $100,000.

At 11½ o'clock, last night, a fire was discovered in the hay-loft above the stables in the rear of the extensive slaughter-house, which was situated at the north-east corner of Fifty-second and Forty-seventh street, owned by Henry Elsner, and occupied by several butchers. Owing to the combustible nature of the contents of the hay-loft the flames spread with great rapidity and before the firemen, who were summoned by an alarm sent out from box No. 237, could arrive, they had extended to the main building. This was a two-story frame-structure completely covered with corrugated iron, and extended 100 feet on First-avenue, and 136 feet on East Forty-seventh-street. Engineer Rhodes, on arriving at the scene of the fire found that the flames were rapidly enveloping the entire structure, and he therefore sent out a second and a third alarm, which brought Chief-Engineer Purdy and a reinforcement of steamers and firemen to the spot. Notwithstanding the well-directed exertions of the firemen, the flames raised rapid headway, and in an incredibly short space of time the entire building was in flames, to the great alarm of the entire neighborhood, and a vast and motley crowd of the denizens of the neighborhood, said it required all the exertions of the large Police force under Capt. Gunner and Sergt. Hamilton to keep the unruly spectators in subjection, and they were often compelled to resort to the use of their clubs to disperse the crowds. Rumors are reaching upon the firemen and Police.

There were numerous horses and a number of mules in the stables at the time, but none were all got out without injury. Over 100 cattle, who were in the stalls in the structure, were burned to death, and a large quantity of dressed meat ready for market was also destroyed.

Before the fire could be extinguished, the entire structure was completely destroyed, and nothing but a heap of ruins is left to mark the spot where the building stood.

The occupants of the building are as follows: Goldstein & Goldsmith, Jacob Hirschter, Myer & Levy, Yager & Bauer, Ullman & Hecksher, Henry Greenebaum, Soloman Greggenhermer, Henry Ersner and Emanuel Loudan, all butchers, whose aggregate loss is estimated at $40,000. The building was owned by Henry Ersner, who claims that it cost him $80,000, and it is a total loss and but partially insured. He had stored in the basement of the building 7,000 hides, which are valued at $70,000, and are considerably damaged. George Spencer owned a lager-beer saloon in one corner of the building on First-avenue, and he sustains a loss of $1,000.

The origin of the fire is at present unknown, but will be made the subject of a rigid examination by Fire Marshal McSpadon.

Congressional Nominations.

PITTSBURG, Penn., July 30.—The Republicans of the Twenty-first Congressional District today nominated Hon. A. M. Taylor, of Indiana County, as Congressional candidate.

BELFAST, Me., July 30.—The Fifth District Democratic Convention today unanimously concurred with the Liberal Republicans in nominating Frederick A. Pike for Congress

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Quite a number of noted speculators and dealers in New-York real estate were in town yesterday (Tuesday, July 29.) At the Exchange, Mr. B. P. Fairchild sold, by order of the Supreme Court, the "Goelet" lease of lot 25 by 100.8, all three-story high-stoop, brown-stone house, situate on the north side of Sixty-third-street, 120 feet west of Third-avenue, for 21 years from 1870, at an annual ground rent of $450, with covenants for two renewals of 21 years each. There was no competition for the property, and it was purchased by Peter Goelet, plaintiff, for $6,000, or $1,000 less than the amount of the mortgage. The "Goelet" lease of the lot, 20x100.8, and the three-story Philadelphia brick house, situate on the north side of Sixty-third-street, 180 feet west of Third-avenue, for 21 years from 1870, at an annual ground rent of $450, with covenants for two renewals of 21 years each, was sold to Peter Goelet, plaintiff, for $4,000.

James M. Miller also sold at public auction the three-story brick building, covering the entire lot, 21.8 by 100.8, fronting on the north side of Fortieth-street, on the north-east corner of Lexington-avenue, to Henry Hansen, for $42,000.

The same auctioneer also adjourned the Supreme Court sale of the lot and buildings situate on the south side of Fortieth-street, 325.4 feet east of Ninth-avenue, 25 by half block, to Tuesday, August 4, by order of R. C. Rolinski, Esq., referee.

The Supreme Court sale of the premises situate on the north side of Seventy-mth-street, 175 feet east of Second-avenue, under the direction of E. P. Hope, Esq., referee, and by the same auctioneer, was stopped by an injunction and adjourned to Aug. 1.

William Kennedy also adjourned the Supreme Court sale of the house and lot situate on the north-west corner of Lexington-avenue and Fiftieth-street, 25 by 80, to Tuesday, Aug. 6, by order of Charles Price, Esq., referee.

The following property will be offered at public auction at the Exchange today, Wednesday, July 30:

By A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co., a large dwelling and a plot of land, 500 by 500, known as the residence of the late John Henry, Esq., situate at Verplanck's Landing, Westchester County, New-York.

By James M. Miller, by order of the Supreme Court, Wm. H. McDermott, Esq., referee, 3 lots of land situate on the north side of One Hundred and Seventy-eighth-street, 168.8 feet west of Third-avenue.

Exchange Sales, Tuesday, July 30, 1872.

Further Contributions to the Children's Fund.

Thirty-six contributions to the Children's Fund were received yesterday, amounting in all to $655 60, which sum makes the fund aggregate $14,366 23. Of the subscriptions handed in yesterday, the sum of $175 is specified by the donors for certain cases mentioned in the TIMES as deserving of relief. These special contributions will be expended in the most careful manner for the benefit of those persons mentioned. The relief work is deserving of especial attention on the part of contributors, for our corps of volunteer visitors are constantly canvassing the City for sick and helpless children, whose parents are unable to provide proper nourishment or medical attendance for them. There are now over two hundred persons engaged in visiting the homes of the poor under the auspices of the TIMES Fund, consisting mainly of clergymen, missionaries, tract distributors, and others interested in the present movement. These persons devote a certain number of hours each day to this volunteer work, and the result is that our District Superintendents find abundant objects for relief, which is promptly extended. The mothers of sick children are beginning to understand the scope of the Children's Fund, and readily accept its benefits, with tearful gratitude.

The following were the contributions received yesterday:

The news-boys' picnic yesterday proved to be a great success, and the little fellows enjoyed the pleasures of the day with all the vim and abandon characteristic of the New-York street boy. They danced on board the barge, cheered every passing craft, and devoured the good things given them with great gusto. We have to acknowledge the kindness of Major Blunt, commandant of the Governor's Island garrison, for the services of the band at that post. One of the ice companies (name withheld by request) sent 2,000 pounds of ice for the news-boys' benefit. We are also indebted to Capt. Charles Post, of the Long Island and North Shore Transportation Company, for free passage of our men and material for the chowder consumed yesterday.

The people of Roonton, N. J., through Rev. O. S. St. John, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in that place, have offered to receive and feed any number of the poor children we can bring to that place for a day's recreation. The farmers are willing to give a public reception to the little ones in the town park, and to furnish each with a lot of sandwiches and fruit to carry back with them to the City in the evening. This generous offer is accepted and will be attended to at an early date.

To-morrow we shall give our seventh excursion, it being intended for the benefit of poor mothers and their young children, agreeably to the request of Mr. James Stokes, one of the Fund contributors. Eight or nine hundred adults and children will participate in the festivities of the day, and the party will proceed, by barge and steamer, to Oriental Grove. Ample preparations have been made in the way of supplies. Fresh sandwiches will be made on board by our own corps of waiters, and milk will be furnished the children in liberal quantity. Ice-cream and candy will vary the bill of fare. The picnic will be known as the Stokes Excursion. The excursionists will embark on board the barge Sarah Smith, at the foot of Eighth and Thirty-seventh streets, East River, at 8 o'clock A. M.

The Stock Exchange excursion will take place on Saturday, when over 900 street children, drawn from the Fifth Ward, will proceed to Excelsior Park, North River. The usual programme will be carried out as to food and amusements.

The Sixth Excursion.

The sixth of the series of TIMES picnics for poor children came off yesterday, and, considering the character of those who were invited to and took a part in it, it was the most marvelous success yet achieved. The party was composed entirely of news-boys and boot-blacks, that class of humanity of which there is not a number and more irrepressible class in New-York. Large posters yesterday announced the picnic and called for a thousand boys. When the Manager of our picnic received the TIMES office, at 8½ o'clock, he found it besieged by boys clamorous for tickets. The crowd was quickly transferred by bus to the City Hall Park, where the smaller boys were all picked out and badged preparatory to their outing, if they had any, and on their shirts as a general rule, thirty before 7½ the superintendents of the various newsboys lodging-houses with their contingents marched into the Park; and till the order for the column to march was given a scene went on such as perhaps the world never witnessed in New-York or any other city.

Hundreds of boys, armed with pails, formed themselves into lines and clustered, and many having nothing to protect their close-cropped heads from the sun, been dashing about in a high state of glee if they had received a badge, or in a state of utter misery if they had not yet done so. Those who were too big to be could beg and pray for a badge. The boys danced, stood on their heads, and turned somersaults from pure exuberance of spirits, and many a big 40 ragamuffin swore that at those who could not be taken. The steps of the City-Hall were crowded with interested spectators of the scene; in fact the whole of the south side of the Park was crowded. At last the boys were formed in line, in three separate divisions, wearing red, white and blue badges respectively. At 4 o'clock the band from Governor's Island entered the Park and taking up their position, the order to march was given. The scene at this moment was really electrical. As division after division, each headed by its own banner, left the Park the crowd cheered and waved their handkerchiefs. Ladies appeared at the windows of the Astor House, every store on Broadway and Parkway was emptied in a moment, and the sidewalks were thronged. As the little fellows passed the Times office they sent up cheer upon cheer. Every moment the number of spectators increased, so that in Chatham street and up Hard Broadway the little army of Sunshine was cheered by a crowd as large as that which attends the Seventh Regiment on dress-parade days. Every instance had a cheer or a kindly word for the boys, and many an encouraging expression was addressed to the members of the staff of the TIMES, who accompanied the excursion. One gentleman exclaimed: "I would give anything to go with you; but I cannot. I shall, however, go to my office and think how much I can possibly afford to give to your fund, and send the money along before you get back." The crowds followed all the way down Beaver-street to the dock, and remained on the pier till after the barge had started, cheering and waving their handkerchiefs.

And then of all the queer scenes that were ever enacted that which began the moment the barge moved from the dock was the oddest. Every one of the boys set to work in a playful, rough and tumble tussle with his neighbor. Whole groups of them were often rolling on the floor together; they played all kinds of quick tricks, and whistled and shouted as though they were doing it for a living. When the band struck up a lively air they all began to dance in the most grotesque fashion. Some of them did the cancan in Bowery theatre style with no little humor, showing that they are pretty frequent patrons of that theatre on Saturday night. And yet, amid this noisy fun and frolic, this frolicking and bear fighting, all preserved the utmost good humor. Scarce a foul expression was heard all day; and a New-York news-boy or boot-black can let his tongue wag, when he is a mind to do so, in anything but purest language. Now, fancy 613 ragged urchins—they could not be better described—in a state of excitement the whole crowd—numbers of them barefooted, many of them carrying their blacking-boxes strung over their shoulders like knapsacks, and hundreds of them mimicking the graces of ballet-dancers. It was laughable and ludicrous in the extreme.

As the barge passed up the East River, every boy got a ticket which entitled him to receive a sandwich big enough for a breakfast, and then another ticket for a mug of well-iced lemonade; not the washy stuff they are accustomed to buy of the street-venders, but good, strong, real lemonade. They tried all sorts of unctious devices for ventilating a second supply, but as the eatables were served on the lower deck, and every boy had to go in file to receive his ticket, pass down the ethnic on one side, receive his rations, and immediately pass up the other stairs, there was very little chance of these Artful Dodgers succeeding with any success. What with eating and drinking, dancing and rushing madly about, cheering the people in passing steam-boats, the laborers on the docks and the coasters on Blackwell's Island, and being enthusiastically cheered in return, the boys seemed to find the time pass quickly enough till Oriental Grove was reached.

On leaving in sight of Oriental Grove the Manager, having succeeded in obtaining silence, requested the boys to comply with any request made to them while at the grove, and especially to be very careful while bathing, in order that no untoward accident might mar the day's enjoyment. At the same time he promised the fellows that they should have every opportunity of amusing themselves. The boys expressed their readiness to be reasonable, and they certainly kept their word.

It was most pleasing to see the eyes of the boys glisten as the steamer approached nearer to the beautiful grove where they were to hold their picnic. Oriental Grove comes down to the very beach, from which there is excellent bathing. Many of the little fellows were making their first trip into the country. One youngster, about eight years of age, said that he had been to the Battery once or twice, and that that was all he knew about trees. It had been thoughtfully arranged to have the chowder ready when the boys arrived. They knew this; and as soon as they espied the steaming kettles at the edge of the grove, they all began to smack their lips and rub their stomachs. Poor fellows! They do not get such a good meal. As case one fled off the boat he was provided with a soup-plate, a spoon, and a large bunch of bread, and they marched in single file to the improvised chowder kitchen, where their plates were filled. They dumped themselves on the nearest rock without loss of time, and the sounds of a very few minutes all had been helped. The chowder was most excellent—the best that could be got. One of the most tattered young rascals, who was plying his spoon at a tremendous rate, was asked by a boy who was about to take a seat by his side if he found the chowder tasted like "Tuse?" Well, Johnny, it tastes just like more. It's bully." The large plates of chowder and bunches of bread disappeared like magic, as also did the clothes of the boys the moment they had put their plate and spoon in the appointed place of safety. But then they had so little clothing on them. In the majority of cases nothing save a well-worn or tattered pair of trousers and an old shirt or generous, composed their costume. When they were all in the water they looked like a school of white porpoises ducking in and out of the water. There were but a very few of them unable to swim. Many of them were excellent swimmers; but it was to see how thin they all were. While the skylarking was going on in the water, one of the boys managed to swallow a quantity of water, and was obliged to be brought ashore by two of his companions. The doctors, however, soon revived him by means of a little summoned. As soon as they had enough of swimming they started several games of base-ball. Others went off in parties into the woods as though fearful of losing a moment's possible enjoyment, and knowing that they must eat up another appetite for the second chowder, to be given out at 8 o'clock. They climbed trees, but picked up quite a green stores and pears, walked through every peat they came across, and were highly unsuccessful in trying to hit small birds with big stones. They did everything that a boy could think of. The cry was unanimously "come on." Delay or stops could not be thought of for a moment. The remembrance of chowder, however, brought them all home pretty punctually at 8 o'clock, and as the chowder was not quite ready, the band played for them in the dancing pavilion. Then a ring was formed with a rope, and Jimmy Reagan and Walley Allen went through some very creditable acrobatic performances. Jimmy Jordan then sang "Down in My Little Bed" and "Down in a Coal Mine," which was encored. Hicks performed a capital jig dance with bare feet, the piccolo-player of the band cheerfully supplying the music; and a boy with the soubriquet of "English" brought this impromptu entertainment to a close by turning a somersault over seven boys piled in a heap. The way the chowder was demolished between 8 and 9 o'clock, and the speed with which the boys made their lips and rub their stomachs. Poor fellows! They do not get such a good meal. As case one fled off the boat he was provided with a soup-plate, a spoon, and a large bunch of bread, and they marched in single file to the improvised chowder kitchen, where their plates were filled.
